Shanghai Mobs Kill Poison Plot Suspects

Alabaman, 'Tired,' Accepts Plaudits

2 Men Now in D. C. Saw Induction by Night Riders, Burke Says.

By Robert C. Albright.

A Senate in which he has served for ten years yesterday elevated Hugo LaFayette Black to life office as United States Supreme Court Justice by a 63-to-16 confirmation vote.

By a simple oath before a notary to uphold the Constitution, he may take the high office vacated by Justice Willis Van Devanter, retired, and in October be formally seated.

Black's nomination was confirmed after six hours of Senate debate featuring legal doubts as to his eligibility, ringing defense of his qualifications, and charges of former Ku Klux Klan backing and affiliation.

Just before the final confirming vote, a futile effort was made to send his name back to the Senate Judiciary Committee for public hearings on his fitness. It was defeated, 66 to 15.

"Very Much Gratified."

The son of a storekeeper and former country lawyer, who became President Roosevelt's first appointment to the Supreme Bench he had vainly sought to reorganize, sat quietly in the Senate secretary's office across the corridor while the Senate battle raged.

As Senators streamed in to congratulate him, he said simply:

"I am very much gratified at the confirmation. I realize it is a position of great honor and responsibility."

While cameras clicked, he posed with Mrs. Black for photographers. A young lady brushed past the cordon of Senators and planted a kiss on his cheek.

"That's my niece," Black said.

Mr. and Mrs. Black will leave shortly on a vacation trip, returning in time for the October court term. He said he was "very tired."

A reporter asked him for comment on the Klan charges, and he declined any statement on anything said in the Senate.

Resignation Expected Soon.

"All you can talk about now is the weather and art," beamed Chairman Henry F. Ashurst, of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

"And you can go ahead and talk about anything you want," Black replied.

The Alabaman's resignation from the Senate, expected momentarily, will clear the way for elevation of scholarly Senator Elbert D. Thomas, of Utah, to Black's old post as chairman of the Senate's important Committee on Education and Labor.

Black, whose New Deal record is nearly 100 per cent, who investigated ocean and air mail contracts, battled for cancellation of air mail contracts, spectacularly investigated public utility lobbying and gave his name to the President's wages and hours bill, now virtually assures the

7-Year-Old Boy Is Injured Twice In Ten Minutes

The youngster injured his arm when he fell from a springboard in the back yard of his home, 310 C street northeast, and an autoist who heard his sobbing offered to take him to the hospital.

The drivers were uninjured, but young Wilson suffered the concussion. A second motorist completed the trip to the hospital with the twice-injured passenger.

Long was charged with reckless driving. Blain was released.

John Roosevelt Hurls Wine on Cannes Mayor

By the Associated Press.

Cannes, France, Aug. 17.—John Roosevelt, son of the American President, said city officials tonight, squirted champagne in the face of Mayor Pierre Nouveau and roughed him with a bouquet of flowers during the annual "Battle of Flowers" Sunday night.

The Cannes festival committee, including the mayor's aides, issued an official statement.

Roosevelt, Harvard student and youngest son of the President, with another youth identified as John Drayton, a member of a socially prominent Boston family, was participating in the flower parade in a two-horse carriage placed at his disposal by a local hotel.

When Mayor Nouveau left the reviewing stand and came to the side of the carriage to greet Roosevelt on behalf of the city, the mayor's aides declared, the youth took a bottle of champagne from a bucket on the carriage floor and squirted the contents in the mayor's face.

Then, the executive's assistants related, young Roosevelt seized a bouquet of flowers and brought them down over the mayor's head.

The mayor "retired as gracefully as possible," his spokesmen avowed, adding that his suit was ruined.

JOHN ROOSEVELT.

"without mentioning the incident." They were believed en route to Paris.

One official explained that the "Battle of Flowers" is a traditional flower fight in which participants customarily throw individual flowers but "not whole bouquets" at each other.

The incident occurred on the famous Cannes promenade known as the Croisette. The mayor was said by his aides to have carried a huge bouquet of flowers to the side of the carriage as a present to the President's son.

House Hastily Passes Huge Spending Bill

New Millions Added to $98,880,000 Deficiency Measure.

By Sidney Olson.

A rampant House trampled down economy pleas and pleas for deliberate consideration yesterday and shoved through a $98,880,000 deficiency appropriation bill by nightfall.

Worried Democratic members meanwhile sought in vain for a means of dislodging the wages-hours bill from a House Rules Committee pigeonhole, but leaders still agreed the measure is dead for the session.

A House Democratic caucus tomorrow night appeared certain, on the theory an overwhelming vote would force rules committee Democrats to allow the bill to reach the floor where passage is certain.

Millions tossed About.

Opposition chiefs were not worried, pointing out caucus action is not mandatory on committee members, and predicting that sufficient members would stay away from the caucus to nullify the force of any mass demand.

The members voted:

To put back into the bill $10,000,000 for farm tenancy loans and $10,000,000 to purchase submarginal lands;

To put back into the bill, against the advice of the Appropriations sub-committee, $1,735,000 additional for the National Labor Relations Board for the current fiscal year, over and above its present total of $785,000. This doubled the committee recommendation of $867,500.

Two Rules Granted.

To slash in half the $150,000,000 authorization granted to the United States Maritime Commission for future shipbuilding contracts.

These moves featured the day-long rush toward the goal of Saturday night adjournment, with disposal of the $78,512,000 deficiency bill as yesterday's scheduled program.

Meanwhile, the House Rules Committee, still reluctant to grant a rule for the strangled wages-hours bill, which would affect the lives of millions of workers, did grant two rules.

One rule allowed House consideration of a bill to protect Eskimos and other Alaskans by encouraging the reindeer industry. The second, coming after a long table-thwacking debate, will send to the House floor today the Wagner low-cost housing bill.

The House had early in the day adopted a special rule which dispensed with morning prayer, would allow at any time a special motion to suspend the rules and pass a bill by two-thirds vote, authorize day-to-day recesses instead of adjournments, and allow the Rules Committee to obtain House approval of their vote on the same day they made the rule.

Meanwhile, the 88 names on a petition for a Democratic caucus had grown to 110 and Caucus Chairman Robert L. Doughton, of North Carolina, said he "might call" a session for tomorrow night.

At the White House, Sidney Hillman, president of the Amalgamated

'Sleeping Beauty' Develops Fever, Taken to Hospital

Chicago, Aug. 17 (U.P.).—Patricia Maguire, Oak Park "sleeping beauty," was removed suddenly to a hospital last Saturday and has remained there since with a temperature ranging as high as 102.6 degrees, it was disclosed tonight.

Mrs. Peter Miley, the girl's mother, said physicians had begun exhaustive tests to determine the cause of the sudden rise in temperature which for 5½ years, despite the illness which holds her in a state of continual sleep, has remained normal.

Nausea has accompanied this illness.

Low-Rent Aid Proviso Sought In Wagner Bill

Fight Expected in House Today to Increase Insurance, Loans.

By Franklyn Waltman.

A determined effort will be made in the House today to add to the Wagner housing bill a title—designed under Administration auspices to stimulate private activity in the field of low-cost rental housing construction.

This proposed title will comprise a series of amendments to the National Housing Act, under which the FHA operates. These amendments undertake to facilitate the private financing of multi-family housing projects for low-income groups by extending the existing Federal insurance provisions. It also will be proposed to authorize national mortgage associations to make direct loans to limited dividend corporations and public housing authorities on projects costing between $250,000 and $1,750,000,000.

Bill Has Right of Way.

These amendments were offered at a special meeting of the House Banking and Currency Committee yesterday by Representative Frank Hancock (Democrat), of North Carolina. After a spirited discussion, they were voted down, 10 to 8. Later in the day it was reported that several of the Democratic members of the committee opposing the amendments, learned they had voted as a result of a misunderstanding. They thought the amendments would weaken the public housing features of the bill, it was said.

At all events, it is understood the amendments will be offered to the

"The Jefferson Memorial—an Editorial—Page 6.

By James D. Secrest.

The House yesterday refused to appropriate $500,000 to start construction of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial on a site vaguely described as "south of the Tidal Basin."

Over the recommendation of the Appropriations Committee, the members eliminated the item by a vote of 116 to 50. The motion was made by Representative Scott (Democrat), of California.

Republicans voted solidly with a substantial number of Democrats to eliminate the initial appropriation of a $3,000,000 authorization.

Representative Boylan (Democrat), of New York, chairman of the commission, fought vainly to defend the "modified" plan of the commission. He insisted that not a cherry tree would be harmed and that the contour of the Tidal Basin would not be altered.

He was persistently heckled by members who demanded to know just where the memorial would be located. In response to his description as "just south of the Tidal Basin," Representative Treadway (Republican), of Massachusetts, said:

"That would put it in the Potomac River."

Boylan insisted that there is "about 1,000 feet" of land south of the basin, however, on which the memorial could be built.

Riches Await Winifred Stoner; Former Child Prodigy Hunted

By the Associated Press.

Washington, Pa., Aug. 17.—A death in England brought a fortune within reach today of Winifred Sackville Stoner, Pittsburgh's wonder child of a generation ago—but relatives have been unable to find her.

Miss Stoner is the prodigy who at the age of three published her first poems and at 12 could speak 12 languages.

E. H. Sackville, her uncle, a wholesale grocer in this southwestern Pennsylvania community, published a notice in New York newspapers today in an effort to find Miss Stoner. Five years have elapsed since he last heard of his niece, who at that time lived in Los Angeles. She is 35 now.

Sackville, confined to bed by illness, has been attempting to communicate with Miss Stoner for four weeks to settle the estate of her grandfather, Dr. John Sackville, of Highbury Park, Kent, England.

Mrs. Sackville, disclosing the search, said her husband's condition had handicapped the efforts to trace Miss Stoner.

Mrs. Sackville asserted the grandfather's estate was "a good-sized one."

Mrs. Sackville emphasized that there was "no mystery" about Miss Stoner's not being located and that it was "just a case of our failing to keep up correspondence."

Miss Stoner wrote a book, "Jingles," at 5 and numerous other books, plays, songs, scenarios and magazine articles followed in rapid succession.

Night of Terror Reigns in Ruined City; 10,000 Japanese Face Annihilation

Necessity Knows No Law—an Editorial—Page 6.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai (Wednesday), Aug. 18. Undisciplined mobs stole through the streets of Shanghai today, searching, beating and killing natives they suspected of plotting to poison the city's water supply, as the bitter battle between Chinese and Japanese burst again at dawn.

Japanese warships, led by the flagship Idzumo, began bombardment of Chinese positions along the Whangpoo River as another night of terror ended for this war-shattered city of 3,500,000.

The bombardment evidently was intended to prevent some 10,000 bluejackets from being cut to pieces before regular army troops fight their way into Shanghai from Liuho, 10 miles distant.

Chinese Guns Reply.

The first American Marine wounded in the Shanghai fighting was hit by shell fragments. He was Pharmacist Mate Floyd Arnold, of the Fourth U. S. Marines, wounded in the hip while on duty in the American sector of the International Settlement, bordering on Soochow Creek.

As the battle progressed today, the American flagship of the Asiatic fleet, the cruiser Augusta, moved up river and anchored off the settlement bund.

Native newspapers had carried rumors that Japanese tried to influence natives to poison the city's water supply.

Infuriated, menacing mobs acted upon the rumors and many natives were killed or beaten. Scores of Chinese were stopped and searched by the raiding gangs. If they possessed powders or medicines of any kind, the victims were beaten—many were killed.

Northwest of the city, thousands of regular Japanese army troops moved against the Eighty-eighth Chinese Division entrenched in the Chapei and Kiangwan areas.

Astor House Seized.

The troops were landed from Japanese transports in the Yangtse River above Liuho. They spread out into attack formation and began advancing on the Chinese from the rear in an effort to relieve 10,000 Japanese bluejackets virtually besieged in the Hongkew area.

Two Japanese divisions were landed in the International Settlement.

Japanese seized the British Astor House Hotel, long one of the best-known hotels in the Orient, and the new Broadway Mansions apartment hotel in the Japanese defense area of the settlement.

The Japanese military quartered 1,500 Japanese refugees in the Astor House, ejecting the management and taking over the property. The manager protested to the Japanese consulate. The consul persuaded the refugees to leave and the hotel was returned to the British manage-

15,000 Leftists Lay Down Arms Near Santander

By the United Press.

With the Nationalists at Reinosa, Spain, Aug. 17.—Fifteen thousand loyalist troops, the biggest "catch" of Spain's 13-month-old civil war, surrendered to Gen. Francisco Franco's nationalists tonight when they were trapped in a pocket of the Cantabrian Sierras, 30 miles south of Santander.

Franco's headquarters said the prisoners, comprising 20 divisions of Santandrians, Asturians and Basques, also surrendered huge quantities of war materials.

The capture, described as "the most brilliant operation of the entire northern campaign," was believed by the insurgents to seal the doom of Santander because the seized battalions were "the cream" of the northern loyalist army.

The surrender occurred near San Miguel de Aguago, seven miles northeast of Reinosa which was occupied by Franco's troops late yesterday.

The loyalists were caught between two converging nationalist columns, one moving upon Santander along the Burgos highway, the other from Reinosa.

The nationalists also occupied the village of Vallellada in the Reinosa zone as they struck northward toward Torrelavega, 12 miles from Santander's gates.

Refugee Children Riot.

Paris (Wednesday), Aug. 18 (U.P.).—Eighteen hundred Spanish children ran wild at Saint Cloud, a suberb, last night when they heard an erroneous report that Santander, wartime Basque capital, had fallen to the rebels.

The children, between the ages of 6 and 15, broke up furniture and fences and stoned mobile guards.

U. S. Marine 'Calls' Bluff of Chinese Officer—and Wins

Shanghai (Wednesday, Aug. 18 (A.P.).—A Chinese officer tried to bluff a United States Marine today—but failed.

The Chinese officer saw a Marine of the Fourth Regiment stop a Chinese ambulance from crossing a bridge connecting Chapei, the Chinese quarter, and the International Settlement. Marines are guarding the bridges joining Chapei and the northern international zone.

"I'll give you people ten minutes to go or I'll blow up the bridge."

The Marine commander answered: "I'll give you ten seconds to go or I'll blow the hell out of you."

Nail Polish Hides Colored Blood in U. S., Says Briton

London, Aug. 17 (U.P.).—Charges that American women paint their finger nails red in an attempt to conceal traces of colored descent tonight fired an angry controversy in the citadel of British conservatism, the letters to the editor columns of the London Times.

George L. Massy, of Folkestone, incited the argument when he wrote to the Times' editor saying he was "credibly informed that the reason some ladies stain their finger nails is in order to conceal traces of black blood, otherwise discernible there."

"Nail painting originated in China 3,000 years ago and has been indulged in ever since by Cleopatra and other fine ladies," he said.

1,200 Marines Sent to China By Roosevelt

Congress Asked to Supply $500,000 for Aid of Americans.

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt ordered 1,200 Marines to Shanghai yesterday to guard American citizens against violence in the Chinese-Japanese hostilities.

Congress was asked to appropriate $500,000 for all necessary relief and evacuation expenses the Far-Eastern situation may require.

Reinforcement of 1,150 Marines already on duty in the chaotic international settlement was announced by Secretary of State Hull who termed the order an "ultra precaution" against mobs and other forms of violence.

Refrains from Arms Ban.

The new contingent, Hull said, will rush preparations to sail from San Diego within ten days. They are expected to arrive at Shanghai in five weeks.

Meantime, President Roosevelt refrained from invoking the neutrality act, with its ban on arms shipments and loans to belligerents, although his policy caused some unrest in Congress.

It was explained officially that China and Japan have not broken off diplomatic relations, and therefore the Roosevelt Administration does not consider the hostilities a state of war comparable to the Italo-Ethiopian struggle.

Word was carefully spread that Mr. Roosevelt favors withdrawing all American armed forces from China when the time is ripe.

Three Senators issued a joint statement yesterday urging that the President apply the neutrality act. The Senators, Nye (Republican), North Dakota; Bone (Democrat), Washington, and Clark (Democrat), Missouri, disputed contentions that the act's ban on arms shipments and loans to belligerents would hurt China more than Japan.

Shanghai's International Settlement Doomed, Says G. W. Dean, Recalling Century of Safety

The end of Shanghai's foreign settlements may come from the present clash between Japanese imperialism and an awakening Chinese nationalism, Prof. William C. Johnstone, George Washington University Far East expert, said last night.

Prof. Johnstone pointed out that the International Settlement and the French concession, which have provided backgrounds for many a popular fiction plot, are now apparently losing the very element which made them important in the development of modern Shanghai—their safety.

The professor, dean of George Washington's junior college and author of a book "The Shanghai Problem," declared that the Chinese are now evidently disregarding the sanctity of the foreign settlements. It was their scrupulous observance of foreign neutrality, he thinks, that made them losers in the fight in 1932.

In telling the history of the International Settlement, Prof. Johnstone outlined a story that has color and romance in it and the adventure of clipper ships sailing 'round the Horn.

They came first in 1843—the foreigners. They came with their hard, brusque ways and their strange clothes and their harsh voices and they signed treaties. The brocaded Manchus, with the memory of 5,000 years of civilization on them, were draining the sands of their last century then.

So the foreigners got in and did what they called "open up China." The white men's ships came up the Yangtze River, manned by ruddy British mariners and by lean New England Yankees. Shanghai became a world port.

Shrewd Yankee traders moved in on Shanghai. They and the British founded their counting-houses, set down the dollar and pound signs of empires. Shanghai was a world port.

The Manchus refused to let the newcomers live in the ancient, walled city. The international city was

Roosevelt Appoints McNinch and Craven on Board to Stop Radio Rows

Leave Granted To Power Chief For 'Clean-up'

Senate Immediately Confirms Both; Step May Avert Inquiry.

By Russell Smith

Acting swiftly to put an end to controversy in the Federal Communications Commission, President Roosevelt yesterday nominated Frank R. McNinch and T. A. M. Craven to two long-existent vacancies on the commission.

The appointments also were interpreted in some quarters as an attempt to forestall threatened Congressional investigation of the commission.

The President's appointment of Craven was construed as a direct slap at Commissioner George H. Payne. Payne had assailed a section of the commission's report which a communications commissioner said was under Craven's supervision.

The two commissioners will sit today at a special meeting of the commission called earlier this week by Acting Chairman Eugene O. Sykes, for they were confirmed by the Senate almost immediately upon receipt of the nominations.

McNinch until yesterday was chairman of the Federal Power Commission and Craven was chief engineer of the communications group. The former asked and received a leave of absence from his chairmanship, was nominated to his new post and confirmed within the space of a few hours.

Long smoldering differences, personal and over policies, have seeped out of the Communications Commission's executive sessions for many months. They were reported to be near a crisis, however, at the meeting fixed for today after a newspaper duel of open letters between Commissioner George H. Payne and Powell Crosley, jr., builder of giant Station WLW at Cincinnati.

During the day the President also sent two other major nominations to the Senate. They were those of Mary Dewson, to be a member of the Social Security Board, and Samuel H. Ordway, jr., to be a member of the Civil Service Commission. Both are New Yorkers.

Mrs. Dewson is at present an industrial economist in the Department of Labor. She is a close friend of Mrs. Roosevelt, a Democratic campaign worker and a social worker.

The most recent of a series of flare-ups within the communications commission occurred Sunday when Payne gave to newspapers copies of a letter asking Crosley to produce financial data. The latter replied that Payne is not a member of the broadcast division of the commission and has no authority to issue such call. Therefore he refused to comply.

Republicans have been highly critical of the commission. Last week a Senate committee reported favorably a bill introduced by Senator Wallace White, of Maine, which included provision for an investigation.

Yesterday Representative Hamilton Fish, of New York, urged an inquiry to determine "what is behind" employment of Charles Michelson, Democratic National Committee publicity director, by the Crosley Radio Corporation. He also proposed activities of Elliott Roosevelt, son of the President, be studied. He said the younger Roosevelt had sold several Texas radio stations to William Randolph Hearst, the publisher, and that ownership of the stations had changed hands "without the formality of a hearing before the Federal Communications Commission.

President Leaves For Virginia Dare Ceremony in N. C.

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt left by special train at 11:13 last night for Roanoke Island, N. C., where he will speak today at ceremonies commemorating the 350th anniversary of the birth of Virginia Dare, the first child of English parentage born on this continent.

The speech will be at 3:30 p. m., Eastern standard time, and will be broadcast. The setting will be a seaside amphitheater constructed in the sand dunes where Sir Walter Raleigh's second colonial expedition established itself, only to disappear completely a few years later.

Because of the Sino-Japanese trouble, the President changed his original plan to return to Washington by yacht from Norfolk. Instead, he will come back by train, arriving tomorrow morning.

Teacher Kidnaped By Mistake Found Drugged in Ditch

Chicago, Aug. 17 (AP).—Found unconscious in a ditch in suburban Evanston today, Miss Edna Meyerle, 27, a Chicago stenographer, recovered at Evanston Hospital today and told the police she was kidnaped yesterday by three men who held her a prisoner for 24 hours.

Police said they believed the girl was the victim of mistaken identity. Physicians expressed the opinion she had been rendered unconscious by an anesthetic. They said the girl was unharmed otherwise.

New Faces in Congress

REPRESENTATIVE PETER J. DEMUTH.

Pittsburgh Man 'Played Safe' With Roosevelt Last November (He Says) and Was Elected by Two to One.

By Liam K. Lenihan.

"Playing safe" was the motto of Peter J. De Muth in last November's general elections.

And so, hanging on grimly (he would have you believe) to the coattails of Roosevelt and Father Coughlin, he rolled back the Republican opposition in Pennsylvania's 'Smoky City' by a vote of almost 2 to 1.

Tall, quiet-spoken, affable, the 45-year-old descendant of Austro-Alsatian forbears is primarily interested in legislation affecting labor, flood control and coinage.

What of the Black-Connery wage-hour bill? he was asked.

"I would prefer to see a minimum, rather than a maximum, wage established," he said.

But he dismissed Southern opposition to the measure with a gesture and these words:

"There is no reason why Southern labor should be a stepchild in our social scheme."

As to coinage . . .

"I feel Congress and the Government should enforce their prerogatives with regard to issuance of currency. I also hold that the Federal Reserve Board should be directly controlled by the United States Government."

Biographical sketch: He was born in Pittsburgh; attended the local public and high schools; was graduated a civil engineer in 1914 from the Carnegie Institue of Technology. He was practicing engineering when America entered the World War, enlisted as machinist mate and was commissioned engineering ensign. After the war, he engaged in the real estate and building business until the depression era forced him to become an assessor. He is married; has two children, and for a hobby, likes golf.

$98,880,000 Deficiency Bill Hurriedly Passed by House

Clothing Workers, told the President of "labor's terrible disappointment, along with most employers" at the forced burial of the wages-hours bill. The President told reporters that they were premature in forecasting defeat for this measure. He also tabbed as an "if" question a request for information on his views for a special session of Congress.

White - maned Representative John A. Martin (Democrat), Colorado, had taken the House floor during the day to protest against throttling the wages-hours bill by a collection of Southern Democrats and Republicans. He reminded members "Republicans won't be held responsible for this—we Democrats will."

Chairman John O'Connor (Democrat), New York, of the Rules group, told members that while there are ten Democrats and four Republicans on his committee, "the feeling was very tense" over the measure, and that he would decline to criticise his colleagues' positions.

He called on Republicans on the committee to add their four votes to the four Democratic votes favoring the measures, in order to get the bill out. The Republicans on the floor thereupon did not content themselves with smiling, but laughed out loud.

The move to restore the $20,000,000 to the deficiency bill was considered an Administrative victory, as the White House has consistently sought a beginning on the long-term program to revamp the dust bowl and rehabilitate the country's tenant farmers.

Chairman Marvin Jones (Democrat), Texas, of the Agriculture Committee, backed up by Representative Clifford Hope (Republican), Kansas, ranking minority member, led the fight to restore the appropriation, and won with unexpected ease.

Low-Rent Aid Proviso Sought In Wagner Bill

House when the revised Wagner housing bill comes before that body today. The House Rules Committee yesterday granted the housing bill the right of way in the House today, with three hours of general debate. A final vote should come before the day ends, thus clearing the House calendar of all measures earmarked for action at this session, except conference reports.

This proposed impetus to private activity in the low-cost housing field had its origin in a recent White House conference of the so-called "human needs committee" on the problem resulting from a housing shortage in a number of cities and a rapid rise recently in rents.

Following that conference the President asserted that steps were being considered to stimulate the private building industry in the low-cost housing field for the benefit of renters. Subsequently Marriner S. Eccles, chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve Board; Isador Lubin, Commissioner of Labor Statistics, and Charles E. Merriam, chairman of the National Resources Committee, drafted the amendments which now will be placed before the House.

Wagner's Support Claimed.

The amendments are understood to have the support of Senator Robert F. Wagner, author of the housing bill, as well as several other Senators interested in that subject. They were not ready when the bill was before the Senate. The Administration likewise is understood to have approved the amendments. Eccles' interest in the matter is to do what he can to increase employment and reduce the relief burden on the Treasury in order to bring about a balanced budget.

The first set of amendments to the national housing act are designed to encourage construction by private interests of multi-family or apartment dwellings, costing from $20,000 to $200,000. At the present time the FHA may not insure a mortgage for more than $16,000 and on dwellings constructed to accomodate not more than four families.

It is proposed to strike out this limitation of "four." It also is proposed to permit the FHA to insure up to 80 per cent of the cost of multi-family dwellings costing up to $200,000, provided, however, that "such part thereof as may be attributable to dwelling use shall not exceed $1,000 per room, and provided further that the application for insurance in respect of such mortgage shall be submitted prior to the beginning of the construction of such multi-family dwelling."

These provisions are held to confine the proposed new insurance features to low-cost housing and also to new construction. At the present time it is not possible to get Federal insurance on a mortgage loan of $100,000 or $150,000 for private construction of a small apartment house.

Limit $1,300 a Room.

The second set of amendments is designed to clarify the provisions of the present law which authorize Federal insurance on loans to limited dividend corporations or public housing authorities. At present, the law provides that such insurance may be granted only on loans to provide "housing for persons of low income." Insurance companies and other financial agencies have objected that this provision is too vague.

So it is proposed to amend the law by requiring that the cost of constructing such dwellings shall not exceed $1,300 a room, thus specifically placing them within the reach of the low-income group. The limitation of $1,300 a room is regarded as a fair average cost for the Nation as a whole by Administration housing experts. This section of the law also is clarified by providing that the insurance shall not exceed 80 per cent of the cost of the project.

On Capitol Hill

Senate Committee Approves Reorganization Bill for Action at Next Session.

ENACTMENT OF REORGANIZATION LEGISLATION was recommended by a special Senate committee yesterday. Leaders said they planned to place the measure on the Senate calendar for action at the next session.

The proposal would give the President power, for three years, to transfer, consolidate or abolish governmental bureaus, except independent regulatory agencies.

The bill would create a new Cabinet post, Secretary of Public Welfare, rename the Interior Department the Department of Conservation, and authorize appointment of six administrative assistants to the President.

The Senate measure goes far beyond reorganization legislation passed last Friday by the House. The House bill did not touch upon abolition of the General Accounting Office or expansion and revamping of civil service. It also limited the President's power to transfer, consolidate and abolish agencies to two instead of three years.

Immune from transfer or abolishment by Presidential order would be the municipal government of the District of Columbia, the board of governors of the Federal Reserve System, and the proposed auditing office.

REPRESENTATIVE JOHNSON (Democrat), Texas, circulated a petition among House members today asking President Roosevelt to provide cotton loans of 10 cents a pound.

Simultaneously, Senator Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina, suggested that Congress set aside $65,000,000 from tariff receipts to pay bounties up to 3 cents a pound on the current cotton crop.

SENATOR COPELAND (Democrat), of New York, for many years a physician and public health official, administered first aid yesterday to one of his colleagues on the Senate floor.

THE SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE adopted a favorable report on the Administration's tax loophole legislation after a three-hour night session with Treasury experts.

Chairman Harrison (Democrat), Mississippi, said he planned to bring up the bill for consideration on the Senate floor today or tomorrow. It has been approved by the House.

The committee adopted two minor amendments. One, offered by Senator Connally (Democratt), Texas, would exempt legitimate oil and gas royalty companies from taxes applied to personal holding companies organized on a similar basis.

The other would permit personal holding companies to deduct from their taxable income any sums used to retire indebtedness.

Harrison said a brief hearing would be held this morning at the request of the National Association of Building Owners and Manufacturers and a New York chemical firm.

Brown Asserts Ponies Would Attract Crime

Reynolds Says 2-Day Inquiry Will Result in Adverse Report.

The District race track bill appeared headed for its second interment this session yesterday as a sub-committee of the Senate District Committee concluded a two-day hearing.

Even Senator Reynolds (Democrat), of North Carolina, who called the belated inquiry, admitted defeat. He said an adverse report would be filed because his two colleagues on the sub-committee were both opposed to the bill.

They are Senators Capper (Republican), of Kansas, and Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland. The latter did not attend the hearings.

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, threw more cold water on the proposal yesterday as the last major witness.

He said a return of the race track to Washington would increase the job of policing the Capital and probably would increase crime.

Replying to W. C. Murphy, of the Central Labor Union, who cited police records of the early 1900's, Maj. Brown said the population of Washington has more than doubled since then.

He also produced an old order to police to be on the watch for new criminals during the racing season.

Missing Emerald Believed Sold in Smaller Stones

Police here believe that an enormous emerald which disappeared from a shop here has been cut up and sold in smaller stones. It was pointed out that $10,000 could be raised from sale of the loot in this way.

Joseph Vanryck Presbourg, expert stonecutter, who, police say, disappeared at the same time as the huge gem and other precious stones valued at $15,000, is being held at Seattle, Wash., awaiting extradition to the District, where he is charged with the theft of gems from clients who patronized his shop at Fourteenth and G streets northwest.

As the list of his alleged victims was augmented by the name of still another Washington jeweler, for whom he did specialized work, police said they believed the list of loot he is charged with taking would continue to grow. The enormous emerald was the property of Mrs. Cornelia P. Mayo, wife of Admiral Henry Mayo, police said. Mrs. Mayo lost other gems, they said, which would bring her total loss to $3,825.

Jewelers alleged to have been victimized by Presbourg include, police asserted, Jacob Heidenheimer, of the 1200 block of H street northwest; Arthur Markle and Bill Hyman, both of F street, and Max Zweig, of the 900 block of D street northwest.

Tick, With Patience of Job, Goes 3½ Years Without Food and Still Hangs On

Helen Louise Trembley, scientific aid in entymology, Department of Agriculture, is seen examining tubes of common wood ticks that are alive and doing well although they have not had a bite to eat in months and months. One tick lived three and a half biteless years, with the department hoping he would die every minute.

Tick Goes 3 and a Half Years Without Food; Lies in Wait 12 Months for a Feast to Walk Past

Any insect that has so much tenacity of purpose he can live three and one-half years without food—and spends much of that time sitting patiently up on a blade of grass just waiting for a cow to come along—probably deserves some sort of medal.

Dr. F. C. Bishop, head of the Division of Insects Affecting Man and Animals, Department of Agriculture, might agree to this if the insect did not happen to be the destructive and disease-bearing tick.

The tick has a longer without-food or care life span than any other insect Dr. Bishop's division has studied at first hand in the department laboratories. This fact will be of considerable benefit to man in his fight against the bearer of Rocky Mountain spotted fever and other ailments.

The Patience of Job.

How long an insect will live and under what conditions are two of the important biological facts a scientist needs to know when he maps a plan of combat. What good does it do a Texas farmer, for instance, to move cattle out of a tick-ridden field for one year—when the tick is only too glad to wait that long?

"The same thing holds with chicken ticks now prevalent in the South. Many chicken farmers think they are solving the problem, when they burn their houses and start over on the same spot immediately, or when they change from that lot for one year and then move back. We have been concentrating our study this summer on the wood tick common in this area. Naturally, it need not be expected that this insect could be cleaned up in one year—although some do expect it," Dr. Bishop said.

The wood tick season is about over for this year and the little pest would hardly bite a person now, even if the person begged him, but the flea is in full flower.

The Pestiferous Flea.

Anybody who thinks the flea season is other than flourishing should read hundreds of the save-us-from-fleas letters now piling into Dr. Bishop's office. Vacationists returning to their homes after a nice summer away are finding the premises overrun with the hungry insects.

What the householders do not know is that the fleas can live easily four months without sustenance and that they have been hopping about on the best chairs waiting for the dogs and cats and people to come back. A three-month fast is just enough to get their appetites in first-class shape. If the family had stayed away five or six months, all would have been well.

As it is, Dr. Bishop advises the families to sprinkle a teaspoonful of derris powder on the back of each dog and cat. This eventually will get every one of the pests, for no self-respecting flea is going to bite a human when there's a good dog handy.

Carpet beetles are another big problem to the division. When food gets scarce, the carpet beetle just slows down its growth. If conditions are adverse it can stall maturity from one to three years. This is the beetle that loves fur coats and is entirely capable of hanging around until you get the coat paid for before it starts gnawing.

Can't Stand the Heat.

The good thing about a carpet beetle is that regardless of how well it can do without food it cannot live forever without heat. That is where storage plants come in. Proper cleaning and storage give perfect control, Dr Bishop said.

Of course, the periodic cicada (locust to you) can be developing without food and underground for around 17 years—and then feel able to stage a song and dance that leaves fields devastated. The common, red bug, even, can live at least a year without food.

And the mosquito will remain dormant in egg form for more than three years. Dr. Bishop sometimes must wonder who is going to win out in this man-against-insect battle, and when the economic waste caused by them is going to outweigh the Nation's ability to pay.

When he starts pondering in that manner, however, he remembers the tremendous progress made in controlling the common house fly. The loss from this little insect alone is still estimated at around $183,000,000 a year—considering diseases caused by it and screen costs. But almost any adult can remember when a fly fan was part of all daylight eating equipment.

'Hatchet Gang' Ruled Weirton, Union Man Says

By the Associated Press.

New Cumberland, W. Va., Aug. 17. In staccato phrases, a former steel worker told a National Labor Relations Board examiner today that a "hatchet gang" was organized to "keep union agitators" out of the steel town of Weirton, W. Va.

Robert Morrow, an S. W. O. C. member who was discharged last October from Weirton Steel Co., testified at the labor board hearing against the company that Claude Conway, chairman of the Weirton Steel Security League, told him:

Claim Organizers Beaten.

The steel workers organizing committee, whose charges of "terrorism" by the company resulted in the labor board hearing, had asserted the "hatchet gang" was a group of special police sponsored by the company and charged that they beat union organizers.

The security league is a social and insurance benefit association of Weirton Steel employes.

Another discharged employe had testified that he feared he would lose his job if he refused to join the company employe representatives' organization.

A member of the Hancock County School Board also had testified it was his opinion that a "plot' prevented the Labor Board from holding its hearing in the Weirton High School.

Feared Losing Job.

Morrow said beer parties had been held for the employes and added that "we always thought the company" paid for them.

William R. Thompson, who said he was dismissed from Weirton Steel last year after 15 years' employment, said he believed he had lost his job because he discussed the C. I. O. with a "spotter."

In the terminology of mill workers, a "spotter" is a worker who informs company officials or bosses of employes' activities.

He said fear of losing his job had caused him to sign a membership blank in the employe representatives group.

Ship Strike Threatened.

New York, Aug. 17 (AP).—One coastwise ship sailing was canceled, docking of another ship was delayed and a general strike affecting all Atlantic Coast shipping was threatened today as a result of a new outbreak between rival unions.

Night Riders Lynch Colored Suspect

By the Associated Press.

Covington, Tenn., Aug. 17.—Six masked men, shouting "To hell with the law!" seized a terror-stricken colored man accused of slaying a white officer from Sheriff W. J. Vaughan today and left his body dangling at the end of a frayed rope after riddling it with bullets.

It was the first lynching in Tipton County since the Civil War and the seventh in the South this year. Circuit Judge R. B. Baptist, ordering the county grand jury to make a "real investigation of the disgraceful, horrible crime," demanded first degree murder indictments against the "night riders" if their identity can be established.

The body of the victim, Albert Gooden, 35, was found partly submerged in a creek 12 miles south of here.

The rope had given way. One end of it remained twisted around the outer beam of a steel bridge. The legs were bound at the ankles. The hands were still in the handcuffs placed by officers. More than 30 bullets had pierced the body.

Britain's Cabinet Seeks Peaceful Solution for Shanghai Hostilities

Orders 'Steps' To Guard Lives And Interests

Exact Decision Secret; Army and Navy Said to Be Involved.

By the Associated Press.

London, Aug. 17.—A miniature British cabinet in an emergency meeting today considered what informed sources called "all possible steps to try to insure a peaceful solution of the Shanghai situation."

It decided to take "all possible measures to protect British lives and interests" in the war-torn Far Eastern metropolis.

Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden unexpectedly broke an out-of-town holiday to return to London to call the meeting.

Those who attended included Viscount Halifax, lord president of the council; Leslie Hore-Belisha, secretary of state for war; Alfred Duff Cooper, first lord of the admiralty, and William G. A. Ormsby-Gore, colonial secretary.

Also present were the permanent advisers of the foreign office, war office and admiralty.

Nature Not Revealed.

A semiofficial communique did not reveal what steps or measures were envisaged, but it was understood that the movements of the fleet and army were affected.

In Shanghai the Second Battalion of the Royal Welsh Fusileers, rushed up from Hongkong, arrived to bolster forces protecting British nationals. The British troops landed at the Bund and marched to the race course in the heart of the International settlement. Another British battalion and half a Punjab battalion were under orders for Shanghai.

'Come Back Home,' Father Begs Youth In Co-ed Murder

Berea, Ky., Aug. 17 (AP).—An elderly father issued an appeal today to George E. Wells, missing Berea College senior, to "come back home" and face a charge he murdered the pretty, 18-year-old co-ed he had wanted to marry.

Weeping as he spoke, John H. Wells, of Auxier, Ky., at the same time expressed doubt his 20-year-old son was alive. He said he feared the youth had killed himself.

Strategy Mapped For Poison Trial

Tickets may be obtained from members of the Washington division 46, National Fraternal Society of the Deaf, which is sponsoring the event.

Poultry Racketeer Jailed.

New York, Aug. 17 (AP).—Arthur (Tootsie) Herbert, named by Special Prosecutor Thomas E. Dewey as head of the poultry racket in this city, was sentenced today to from four to ten years in Sing Sing Prison by State Supreme Court Justice Ferdinand A. Pecora.

Shanghai Waterfront Section Ablaze After Bombardment by Japanese Battleships

Aerial view of Shanghai's waterfront shows the customs jetty (a), where tenders picked up American women and children, continuing down the Whangpoo River amidst shellfire, as indicated by dotted line, to American vessels waiting at the river's mouth. Yesterday's battle lines were drawn from the area north of Shanghai centering on North Sechewan road (b), through outskirts of Hongkew (5), where scores of fires were raging—to the Whangpoo and across the river in the Pootung industrial area (6), where 35,000 Chinese troops were entrenched with heavy artillery which fired upon Hongkew and Japanese warships across the river front. Japanese battleships threw a barrage on western sections of the international settlement (3) and fires raged in the Chinese section of Chapei (4). Before the famous Astor House (c) could be closed, the Japanese military quartered 1,500 Japanese refugees there, virtually ejecting the management and taking over the property. Bursting shells shook the heart of the French concession (2), just north of the Chinese native city of Nantao (1). Nippon's bombers dropped explosives on the junction of the Shanghai-Hangchow and Shanghai-Nanking railroads, just beyond (e). Route of the Shanghai-Nanking line is shown as it comes into North Station (d).

Mobs Riot Through Shanghai; 10,000 Japanese Are Cut Off

Additional squadrons of Japanese planes appeared at 8:20 a. m. and began intensified bombardment of strategic Chinese points, extending from Chapei to Woosung, 10 miles down the Whangpoo.

It was feared that the Japanese would bomb Nantao, most thickly populated Chinese city directly adjacent to the French Concession at its south border.

Meanwhile, as the war spread across China, it was reported that the Central Chinese government was preparing to flee Nanking and move the national capital far inland to Changsha, capital of Hunan Province.

It also was reported that the Central government had adopted a law for national mobilization. This was seen as an indication China was preparing for increasingly widespread conflict with the Japanese.

The problem of caring for the hundreds of thousands of homeless refugees in Shanghai became pressing.

The stolid, hungry people have been living in vacant lots, in alleys, or even sleeping on sidewalks since the conflict drove them from their homes six days ago.

Authorities of the French Concession and the International Settlement began rounding them up today. They will be isolated south of the concession, given food and a measure of protection.

Ten thousand tons of rice are on the way from Hong Kong, one item in the food program. But hunger drove some of them today to attack—they tried to seize two truck loads of rice. Armored cars drove them back.

Two hundred and ninety-four American women and children fled the city today, embarking by tender at 11:12 a. m. for the ten-mile trip to Woosung, where the liner President McKinley waited. Three hundred thirty-seven left yesterday, and 200 the day before.

Great fires which blistered the heavens at nightfall Tuesday had died to ashes this morning in Japanese sections—smoldering ruins could be seen in the once thriving, vast industrial district.

The city had spent a nervous night in eerie darkness, slit now and then by fingers of light from the 20-odd Japanese warcraft along the Whangpoo, tirelessly seeking with floodlights to search out Chinese attempts to blow them up.

Two British destroyers moved into position on the Whangpoo around midnight Tuesday, their white ensigns fluttering under their own searchlights that all might be informed of their neutrality.

Despite evacuation of the settlement north of Soochow Creek, one foreign hospital continued to operate there behind Japanese lines. It was the Sacred Heart, under the French Sisters of Mercy, who refused to leave, saying they would remain "even though the institution be blown to bits." Three Chinese doctors are assisting them in caring for 300 wounded Chinese noncombattants, with the number increasing.

French Area Shelled.

Shells and shell fragments in increased numbers sprayed the French Concession, in which most of the American community lives, as the battle for Shanghai roared into its sixth day. Police said shrapnel or splinters caused at least 50 new casualties, all Chinese, within the concession. Many of them died.

Food shortage was added to the dangers of life in Shanghai, and foreign emergency committees organized means of bringing food through the battle lines flung around and within the greater city.

As long as daylight lasted Tuesday, Chinese and Japanese air fleets circled above the city, striking viciously at enemy positions and doing tremendous damage. How many lives they claimed could not even be estimated.

French authorities protested to both Chinese and Japanese officials against artillery firing over the French Concession. In midafternoon heavy explosions rocked the "French town."

Four hundred French marines were thrown around the waterworks half a mile south of the city to insure water supply for the foreign communities. The French also placed guards around their convent and weather stations at Siccawei, to the west, these dispositions lengthening their front by some 5 miles and throwing isolated detachments, most of Annamites and other colonial troops, far out into territory where Chinese forces are concentrating.

Mob disorder invaded the foreign settlements. One Korean was killed by infuriated Chinese. A Chinese accused of being pro-Japanese was badly wounded before being rescued by French Concession police. Chinese bands began looting closed foodshops, reforming as rapidly as they were dispersed by police.

Japanese Winning.

Copyright, 1937, by the United Press.

Shanghai (Wednesday) Aug. 18 (U.P.).—For the first time since the new Shanghai war started the night of August 9, when two Japanese navy men were killed by Chinese soldiers outside the Hungjao Airdrome, the Japanese appeared definitely to be gaining the upper hand today.

The Japanese offensive was in the form of a pincers movement. They were throwing a wall of artillery and bayonets around the city on both banks of the Whangpoo.

The Japanese attacked on all fronts, except in Shantung Province, where they still have hundreds of civilians to remove.

They drove anew at fortified Chinese positions athwart the Nankow Pass, on the Peiping-Suiyuan railway northwest of Peiping, and they fought southward on the Peiping-Hankow railway south of Peiping and the Tientsin-Pukow-Nanking railway south of Tientsin.

Spread of hostilities to south China was feared and thousands of additional Chinese civilians left the ports of Foochow, Amoy, Swatow and Ningpo.

More than 150,000 men—some estimates were as high as 200,000—were engaged along a front of some 45 miles in the battle of Shanghai today.

Casualties were running into the thousands, although there were few additional dead in the Anglo-American area of the International Settlement and the French Concession.

More than 600 Americans, chiefly women and children, had been removed from the city and were en route to Manila on two American passenger liners requisitioned for the purpose. Hundreds of British nationals also had been removed, chiefly to Hongkong.

Even able-bodied American men were urged by U. S. Consul General Clarence Gauss to leave on any boat on which they could get passage.

Disease was increasing in this partly wrecked city and the safety of some 3,400 Americans and thousands of Occidentals was becoming more dangerous hourly.

KEEN NOSE
Nose large, but narrow, aristocratic and smooth-skinned. The fleshy part of the nose, which separates the nostrils, droops down low between the nostrils. A deep depression is observed at the point where the nose joins the brow, while a slight hump is noted on the bony ridge below the bridge.

SENSITIVE LIPS
Upper lip characterized by its length, in marked contrast with the lower lip, which is characterized by its fulness—particularly in the center. The upper lip is compressed against the teeth, frequently being so rigidly drawn that the teeth are quite in evidence. The lower lip, however, is soft (not flabby) and to a slight degree is wont to droop.

Wilkins Begins Hunt Today for 6 Soviet Fliers

Explorer to Meet Noted Canadian Pilot in Washington.

Toronto, Aug. 17 (Canadian Press) Canadian Pilot Herbert Hollick-Kenyon announced late today all arrangements had been made for himself and Sir Hubert Wilkins, Arctic explorer, to take off tomorrow on a flight to Aklavik to search for six Russian fliers missing on a transpolar flight from Moscow.

Hollick-Kenyon will leave Toronto tonight for Washington to meet Sir Hubert. The Russian Embassy, he said, had arranged for a twin-engined plane with a cruising range of 2,500 miles to be used in the search.

The pilot, famed for his exploits with the Lincoln Ellsworth Antarctic expedition in 1934, will fly from the United States Capital with the explorer to a refueling point "somewhere" in northwestern Ontario. Then the route will be to God's Lake, Man., from which base Hollick-Kenyon will fly nonstop to Aklavik, far up in the subarctic.

Ocean Rim Searched.

Fairbanks, Alaska, Aug. 17 (AP).—A lone Canadian pilot, Bob Randall, dared frowning northern skies today to search the Arctic Ocean rim for the lost Soviet transpolar plane of Sigismund Levanevsky and five comrades.

The rescue fliers still were without definite word from the missing plane, which left Moscow Friday for a 4,000-mile nonstop flight to Fairbanks and last reported its exact position early Saturday morning when it was over the North Pole.

Organizer Is Appointed For Federal Workers

Appointment of Mathew Faerber, General Accounting Office worker, as an organizer for the United Federal Workers of America, C. I. O. group, was announced yesterday.

Faerber, a graduate of Rhode Island State College, came to Washington two years ago. He is a former president of the G. A. O. local of the U. F. W. A., and has been active in the Holy Name Society of the Immaculate Conception parish.

THE FEDERAL DIARY

By Scott Hart.

Newcomer

Twenty-nine-year-old Robert S. Monahan, one of the three observers who manned the Second International Polar Year Station on Mount Washington—where the wind blew one day at 231 miles an hour—has come to the Chief Forester's office here to take charge of the Correspondence Section.

His first reaction: The weather isn't as bad as he had expected. And Monahan knows a great deal about disagreeable weather, mostly cold weather. He knew it in Alaska and on Mount Washington. His background, otherwise, belies his years.

He first became associated with the U. S. Forest Service as a forest guard in the summer of 1928. After graduation from Dartmouth in 1929 and from the Yale School of Forestry in 1931, he worked in the National Forests of New Mexico and later participated in the Washburn-Mount Crillon, Alaska, Expedition of 1932.

It was in the fall of that year that he helped establish the Mount Washington Observatory. Two others were with him—Salvatore Pagliuca, now with the University of Boston, and Alexander McKenzie, a radio technician. Monahan went on the mountain first and established the post in a previously-used building that at least was weather-sturdy.

* * * *

Terrific Winds

A weather-sturdy building was needed, he recalled yesterday. The temperatures stayed below zero and the winds were incessant and terrific. All the storms that came down from the St. Lawrence Valley and up the coast seemed to join and burst around the mountain. Ice, frost and snow cemented the building's exterior. The setting was curious.

The three observers were not isolated from civilization. They could look down from their perch upon street lights, but all the while their observatory situation had all the characteristics of an Arctic or Antarctic outpost. They brought along a deck of cards, but the routines of work engaged them all the time. Their only relaxation was in skiing to the mail box or to the outer station for supplies.

* * * *

231 M. P. H. Wind!

The 231-mile-an-hour wind that whipped the station was the greatest velocity that ever has been recorded. Ordinary instruments would have been beaten to pieces in it, Monahan said. His book, "Mount Washington Reoccupied," goes into the details.

Thereafter, Monahan acted as junior forester and project superintendent in the Wild River and Wildwood C. C. C. camps. Prior to coming to Washington, he was staff assistant in charge of operations on the White Mountain National Forest.

He is regarded as an authority on the White Mountains and has filled many speaking engagements in New England.

Armory And Civic Center.

There is nothing new in current arguments against saddling the District with the cost of erecting a National Guard armory. Ever since the Guard was federalized it has been agreed that the local corps, in particular, is primarily a Federal institution. As such, the logical reasoning is that its housing should be a Federal responsibility.

Though the argument is convincing, it has nonetheless served as a principal impediment for the accommodations which the local guardsmen clearly need. In these circumstances, an excellent compromise presents itself in the suggestion that a combination armory-auditorium be built on the site proposed for purchase at the end of East Capitol street. Washington would doubtlessly be glad to contribute substantially towards the construction of such a building. That it would be feasible is made certain by the experience of other cities.

Baltimore presents a good example. In its Fifth Regiment Armory was held the Democratic convention which nominated Woodrow Wilson in 1912. There big indoor athletic events are staged. There indoor tennis courts for public use in winter were easily made available. There Baltimore has held most of its automobile shows and many other similar exhibitions. There, finally, the Fifth Regiment drills.

A building of this broadly useful character would be enthusiastically welcomed by Washington—the city which has every advantage as a convention city except a hall to accommodate the meetings.

Export Of Helium.

Following closely on the ill-advised proposal to rent Brazil six destroyers comes the Senate's approval of the export of helium. Since the gas is used principally to inflate dirigibles, which perhaps have some wartime value, it might seem as though Uncle Sam has suddenly become an acolyte to Mars.

So, at least, it appeared to Senator Lodge when the helium bill came up for debate. The young Bay Stater, however, lacked proportion in his attitude. In the first place, one shipload of Lynn shoes would probably have a greater military significance than the amount of helium contemplated for export. In the second place, shipments of the gas would be so carefully regulated that if it were used for anything other than the stipulated "medical, scientific and commercial purposes," permission for its further export could be immediately withdrawn.

The "Hindenberg," it will be recalled crashed when its bag of hydrogen ignited; noninflammable helium would have prevented this terrible accident and the resultant setback to air commerce. But helium is found only in this country. Since there is slight interest in lighter-than-air navigation here today, the United States would be playing dog in the manger to refuse dirigible-minded nations access to its unique supply in behalf of society as a whole.

Even at this late stage of the session it may be hoped that the House will see this point, and follow the Senate's excellent lead.

In The News.

The poet who said that it is love that makes the world go round told only half the truth. As a revolutionary force love has a side partner, The Job. It may be a steady job or a part-time job, but if a man has his heart in it, that comes first.

More people feel this than know it; more people know it than make acknowledgement. But once in a while the fact leaks out in a man's testamentary effects, usually with money left for the furtherance of a plan dear to his heart; and once in a greater while with a symbol having in it a little touch of drama.

One of these unusual cases was recently noted in the news. The body of Tom V. Bodine, editor and publisher of the Paris (Mo.) Mercury, lay in state in the composing room while the press turned out the current issue of his weekly paper. It was what he wanted, and his last request was being faithfully observed.

Without knowing him personally it is safe to say that Tom Bodine felt himself to be an integral part of the community. He knew, and was known by, pretty nearly every man, woman and child in the county. He had chronicled the arrival into the world of many grown to maturity, had written pleasant little items of what happened to them, and had spread the good qualities of those who had traveled to the final bourne. And what he wrote had weight with those who read his paper. He knew that he had a job worth while. What greater tribute could he pay to it than to be on hand in the flesh even after the spirit had departed?

It may even be that at the very last he grinned and said to himself, "Well, anyhow, it ought to make a darned good story." And it did.

Necessity Knows No Law.

Much besides brick and plaster and human life is being destroyed by the furious fighting now raging in Shanghai. Before the dust of battle clears there it will very possibly be found that foreign extraterritorial privileges in this greatest of Asiatic cities, the third largest port in the world, have gone beyond hope of recovery.

If Japan is successful in her effort at conquest at Shanghai this may not be immediately the case. Tokyo would not wish to raise complications with the American, British and French governments and it would undoubtedly hope to utilize these foreign troops in maintaining order and giving a semblance of international co-operation to the seizure of the city. But a Japanese triumph now would probably mean permanent Japanese control over the great metropolis. And such control would in the long run indicate abolition of extraterritoriality for Japan's commercial rivals.

If China wins, termination of the foreign concessions, as Prof. Johnstone of George Washington University indicates in an interview elsewhere in The Post today, is likely to come more promptly. Certainly the Japanese would be forced to abandon their special privileges and there is good reason to suppose others would suffer similarly. Whatever their advantages the concessions have always served as safe centers for intrigue, resistance to and often open contempt of Chinese authority. If the troops of Chiang Kai-shek can throw out the Japanese invader they will doubtless seize the opportunity to pluck the entire thorn of special foreign privilege from China's flesh.

And it is by no means unlikely that China will win, though necessarily at terrible cost, at Shanghai this time. In the first place the attack there menaces the very existence of the Nanking government, forcing it to use every available agency to protect itself. In the second place the Japanese expeditionary force is here in a very exposed position, far from its base and liable to be cut off from its supports. Finally the Chinese troops now converging for the defense of Shanghai are of very different caliber, and very differently armed and trained, to the umbrella-carrying, undisciplined mobs at which the outside world once poked fun.

The Chinese Nationalist forces are using airplanes now, and they have plenty of them, including many American planes of the latest models. It is the first time Japan has had to confront this sort of resistance from China and it is the first time the invaders have met the modern artillery and the trained discipline of Chiang Kai-shek's crack troops. In 1932 merely tentative Chinese resistance checked the Japanese at Shanghai. This time the defenders should give a much better account of themselves.

In the struggle, as already amply attested, neither side is likely to stand on ceremony with regard to the foreign concessions. A punctilious attitude over the extraterritorial areas cost China heavily when Shanghai was last attacked. No such constraint is to be expected this time.

Appreciation of the terrible insecurity of the foreign settlements is what stimulates the Administration to do all that is possible to evacuate the Americans whose lives and property are now so greatly jeopardized at Shanghai. It is not the fault of China that the foreigners there are endangered. The responsibility rests solely on the shoulders of the utterly reckless Japanese aggressors. Certainly there is no disposition in this country to aid that aggression by urging that China is unjustified in defending herself in whatever way seems best to her government.

It would have been well if extraterritoriality in China had been voluntarily abandoned when good will was to be gained by the action. For the present war promises to end the one-sided arrangement, without any bargaining, whichever side comes out on top.

A Sweet Record.

Department of Commerce estimates indicate that the commercial production of candy in 1936 attained a record total of 2,054,000,000 pounds, valued at more than $300,000,000. This figure represented an increase of over 400,000,000 pounds from the ten-year low of 1931. On a per capita basis, moreover, consumption slightly exceeded the previous top figure for recorded years, attained in 1929.

There is encouragement in the rapidity with which so-called luxury buying of this sort revives following a period of depression. At the same time it emphasizes the vulnerability of an industrial society in which a large share of national income is spent for articles that are not absolutely necessary. It is a mark of progress, a sign of increasing wealth, that people should have the means to pay for candy as well as bread, for style in clothing as well as protection against the elements, for comfortable housing as well as shelter. But along with these gains go problems of adjustment that become increasingly difficult in periods of depression.

The sharp decline in candy consumption in the depression years meant not only loss of business to confectioners, but a drop in demand for sugar, glucose and edible nuts amounting to many hundred thousands of pounds. The expanded sales of last year brought back that lost demand for raw materials and helped to spread recovery. But the probability is that there will be a reversal of the business trend some day. And, as usual, the nonessential consumer goods will then feel the impact most severely.

The farther the economic advance, therefore, the more difficult the problem of stabilizing employment and income. Paradoxical though it sounds, the poorer a nation, the more immune it is to the influences that make for depression. When everybody works for a bare subsistence, incomes are small, but demands are also relatively steady.

The Jefferson Memorial.

It pays to protest in a righteous cause. After seven months of uphill work against an intrenched minority, plans for a Jefferson Memorial which would involve disfiguring the Tidal Basin seem to have been shelved for good.

Certainly the House handed advocates of this vandalism a sound rebuke when they attempted to slip a $500,000 item into the third deficiency bill. The commission, moreover, was roundly and properly criticized for having worked three years without making annual reports to Congress as its instructions stipulated. Finally, its members made themselves ridiculous when they were unable to describe exactly the new site which they claimed would leave the Tidal Basin and its cherry trees untouched.

All this should be enough to warrant a wiping clean of the slate. At the next session, a new study of the bungled project should be ordered. For, if the money is available, a memorial to Thomas Jefferson is eminently desirable. But it should be designed and located so as to satisfy the Nation which the Great Democrat worked so effectively to found.

This means, in the first place, that it should be fitted fairly into the long-range plan of the Capital City. Specifically, it should not be squeezed into an overcrowded section such as the Tidal Basin neighborhood, which already has the Washington Monument and the Lincoln Memorial next to it, to say nothing of Government buildings, railroad tracks and a principal arterial highway. Least of all should the memorial be permitted to destroy any feature of Washington so cherished as the Japanese cherry trees.

Where can it be placed? There are a variety of possibilities. There is a site near the Anacostia River which would have the special recommendation of tending to improve a part of the city that has been most unfairly neglected. Erection of a major monument in that section, together with the approaches and parks which would naturally accompany it, would be a considerable incentive for needed private developments and modernizations. Another site suggested is just across the Potomac in Jefferson's native State. Bluffs looking down Constitution avenue would give this location a position unequalled for prominence and grandeur.

But whatever the site, and there are many possibilities, let it be thoroughly weighed to insure conformity with the wishes of both Capital and Nation. A memorial, it is time to realize, is only as valuable as the popular respect it inspires.

Legislative Councils.

A new device to expedite lawmaking and improve the quality of the legislative output was discussed the other day on the page opposite by Bryant Putney. This device—the legislative council—has been set up in eight States during the past six years in response to a demand for some agency capable of giving the expert advice and providing the informed leadership so greatly needed by State legislatures.

It appears that the councils already established differ to a considerable extent, both as regards membership and duties. Furthermore, some have been much more successful than others. Obviously, none of them has been in existence long enough to enable final judgment to be passed upon their usefulness. It is encouraging, however, to know that State governments are beginning to realize the handicaps under which their legislatures work and are trying to do something about it.

Many State legislatures meet only biennially and for a brief session. Often a large proportion of the membership is entirely inexperienced. They have no coherent legislative program before them and are not competent to deal intelligently with some of the complex problems calling for action. To provide the necessary information and make suggestions without unduly influencing policy is the special task of the legislative council. In Kansas, where such a council has functioned most successfully, one of its chief duties is to clarify issues, assimilate and sift facts and thus help to keep discussions on a correct factual basis in regular committees and on the floor.

If these councils are so constituted as to be nonpartisan, if they are careful not to encroach too far upon the domain of the Legislature itself, there is no doubt that they can perform a very constructive work. But these reservations imply that the device should not be adopted without introducing all necessary safeguards against usurpation of power or abuse of influence.

A new menace to farm crops is the Australian weevil which has recently invaded this country. It has about come to pass that the only things the farmer can keep without spraying is the mortgage and the grindstone.

Letters to the Editor

All communications must carry the writer's name and address, though pen names are permitted at the Editor's discretion. In fairness to other correspondents, brevity is requested. Letters are subject to condensation.

The Church Of England.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I esteem The Post and appreciate its foreign news immensely, but I have missed something in its columns which I ask your indulgence to state, temperately and with due propriety.

The prime minister of England by his silence on certain phases of the subject of the grabbing of Ethiopia by Italy and by his letter of conciliation, or reconciliation, recently addressed to Mussolini, has, in effect, condoned the "grab" in question and indicated that all will be forgiven if Il Duce will only play ball in the Mediterranean area.

The Archibishop of Canterbury, primate and titular head of the Church of England has not, to my knowledge, voiced or written a protest at this attitude of the prime minister but has piously kept his peace.

It seems to me that the attitude of both these leaders of modern thought on the question of the conquering and confiscating the land of a small nation by an avaricious big one had been that of rather complacent front seat onlookers. If anything has been said at the recent convention at Oxford, where thousands of clerics and laymen of the Episcopal Church discussed world needs—if anything in condemnation of the attitude of these two leaders was said, I failed to read it in The Post. If anything was said at this conference by any of the delegates, lay or clerical, representing the Washington diocese, in condemnation of the leaders of the conference for this failure to protest, and loudly enough to reach the pages of The Post, I didn't notice it.

All the alibis and camouflage that can be devised will not change the opinion of this writer that disintegration is in process within the organized Church of England—and it's my church, at that!

Apology For Mr. Greener.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Samuel Greener should be tendered an apology. It was a deliberate insult to Mr. Greener to lead him out his way by advertising that implied Beverly Beach was open to the general public. Since the beach remains the exclusive resort of narrow-minded persons who practice a questionable type of Christianity, the State should refuse these persons the right to clutter up the public highway with false advertising—advertising that results in a conscious or unconscious insult to a citizen of the United States.

As a Nordic, I offer Mr. Greener my personal apology and assure him that if my Revolutionary ancestors were alive today they would certainly not tolerate this open insult to a visiting citizen from another region.

However, Mr. Greener should be aware that other beaches in Maryland and Virginia are marked by courtesy and tolerance.

Lafayette Park's Trees.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: About the dying trees in Lafayette Park: Fine for your editorial and cartoon! The beeches are dying from having their feet buried too deeply; just as we may expect more trees in the park to be suffocated. You can't bury the roots of trees under a foot or more of extra soil, and then pack it down, and expect tree roots to get air necessary for their growth, or even life.

No underground water killed the magnolias (and there are two which have died) but they died because, instead of having extra soil piled around them, they had most of the space around their roots covered with concrete, in order to make a wide and straight and "pretty" concrete walk. One magnolia died on each side of the two new walks laid out north of the Jackson Statue. Fancy iron gratings were made and placed immediately around the bases, but the real damage was done by cutting off all air from their roots—no trees could survive that treatment.

Magnolias and beeches are both water-loving trees, and it is not likely that any underground springs have interferred with the normal growth of these trees. If Lafayette Park is to become a swamp, then bald cypresses and black and sweet gums and willows had better be planted there. TREE LOVER.

Age Of Augustus.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your correspondent disputes Dr. Phelp's statement that the present year is the second millennium of the Emperor Augustus. He arrives at his conclusion by assuming that the arbitrary date selected by the Catholic Church for the birth of our Lord is of historic validity.

The fact is, we do not know either the day or the year our Lord was born. Nor do we know whether the early fathers assumed that he was 1 year old when he was 7 days old or when he had actually attained the age of 1. All other children outside of China do pass through a year 0.

All that is necessary to determine the proper date for the millennium of Augustus is to consider the following known facts. Augustus died at the age of 77. He has been dead 1,923 years. JAMES BRANNIN.

Old Government Horses.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I take my pen in hand to protest in behalf of five poor old mules and horses, 20 years old, that our good Government proposes to sell at auction.

No one who had money enough to feed a horse or mule would buy a beast described as only in fair health and dragging a leg or becoming lame when used regularly. You can picture them drawing vegetable carts and hauling trash in the heat until a merciful stroke takes them off.

Why not put them out when they can no longer do constructive work, or give them the benefits of old-age pastures for the short time that is left.

The few dollars that they bring cannot compensate for this inhuman behavior. B. L.

Senator Black As A Justice.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is declared that Mr. Black is not of fit caliber to serve as an associate justice of the highest court in the land. From a narrow legalistic stand this assertion may be true, for we are accustomed to think that only very eminent lawyers should sit in such distinguished company; nevertheless, I doubt not that the President has looked for more humanistic qualities in his nominee, so that the senior Senator from Aalbama's alleged lack of legal ability or so-called "judicial temperament" may, if he is confirmed, be acquired in his new surroundings as opportunity permits.

It is rumored that Mr. Black once had the political support of the Ku Klux Klan; therefore he may not possess sufficient breadth of impartiality. I fail to see what direct bearing this allegation might have on his manner of voting, whether with the majority or the minority, when his colleagues and he are deciding a particular case before them. The pity of it is that we still have so much bigotry in the United States.

It was a foregone conclusion that in nominating a successor to Mr. Justice Van Devanter the President would choose an out-and-out New Dealer. Because Hugo L. Black has seen eye to eye with the Executive on all matters of legislation put forward by Mr. Roosevelt, a few "regular" Democrats are perturbed. Perhaps it would not be such a bad thing for the welfare of the submerged third "ill-housed, ill-fed and ill-clothed" if the Administration's point of view were to be infused under the skin of certain Supreme Court justices. I hope the new member of that august body will do a little missionary work on the side in this respect.

As to raising a constitutional bar to Mr. Black's elevation, if any question of this nature is involved, your paper reports that Senator Borah, who is an authority on points of constitutional interpretation and at the same time a broad-minded man, will probably not oppose confirmation. At long last the people are going to get a break with their Supreme Court. GUY d'AULBY.

Washington, Aug. 16.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The "Reaction to the Nomination" has been convincingly analyzed by Mr. Linn A. E. Gale, who also has given some of the best reasons why a man of Senator Black's type is acceptable to labor and the inarticulate masses.

If common sense and intellectual honesty are still cardinal virtues, then, I believe, the country has nothing to fear from a man of the caliber of Senator Black.

The strongest opposition, no doubt, will arise from the Bar Association, which, incidentally, should set its own house in order before attempting to monopolize the highest branch of the judiciary.

JOHN DAVEY.

Washington, Aug. 16.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have followed the arguments pro and con since President Roosevelt presented the nomination of Senator Black to the Supreme Court of the United States to fill a vacancy caused by the retirement of Mr. Justice Van Devanter. I will not discuss Senator Black's qualifications except to state my belief that his record as a Senator shows him favorable to the masses and not to the classes.

Senator Borah has raised a question of no vacancy. For the sake of argument let us suppose all nine judges of the Supreme Court had reached the retirement age and all decided they would agree to retire. According to Senator Borah's argument, no vacancy would exist. Consequently, no one could be appointed to fill the nine positions of Supreme Court justices, because in his argument he states no vacancy exists. If this were so, the Supreme Court could not function because the nine justices would have retired.

Just where would the affairs of the United States be if Senator Borah's argument prevails?

THOMAS R. MECHEM.

Arlington, Va., Aug. 16.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: From Justice Black we might expect black justice as exemplified by the "Black Inquisition."

Washington, Aug. 14.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have always understood that the chief requirement for a Supreme Court justice or any other, for that matter, was merely to put common sense into practice.

The World's Safest Ship

THE Normandie, France's sleek greyhound of the seas, made maritime history last week by being the first passenger ship to complete an east-west passage of the Atlantic in less than four days. But even as the world acclaimed this latest exploit of what, on the record at least, is the world's fastest ship, the United States Maritime Commission was announcing plans for the building of what it termed "the world's safest" one.

The new ship, bids for which are now being called, will be the long-awaited successor to the retired Leviathan. Although she will be the largest commercial ship ever built in this country, she will not be in the same class with her German-built predecessor, so far as size and weight go. She will be dwarfed even further by the Queen Mary, the Normandie and the new giants of the Italian and German merchant fleets. But into her will go details of design and material, according to the commission, which will make her the nearest approach to the non-burnable, nonsinkable vessel that engineers dream about.

The vessel will be 723 feet long with a displacement of 34,000 tons and a 22-knot speed. Thus she will be in the same general size class as the Paris and Roma. She will be considerably larger than the George Washington and the Manhattan, now the largest American entries in the transatlantic ferry service. Her breadth of 92 feet indicates that she will run to stability and comfort rather than to rakishness in design.

Her hull and superstructure will be the repository of every safety device that has proved its worth on the ships of all nations. In addition, the lessons of the Morro Castle and the Mohawk—the first was destroyed by fire and the second crashed and sank—will be built into her every plate and rivet.

Despite the fact that she is, as yet, only a series of blueprints, the ship has already gone through an ordeal by fire and has come out unscathed. Said the commission in announcing plans for her construction: "The ship will be constructed throughout of fire-resisting material in accordance with the recommendations contained in the recent Senate safety-at-sea report which resulted from the investigation of the Morro Castle and Mohawk disasters."

• • • •

The report was the work of the Senate Commerce Committee and embodied the results of an 18-month investigation into fireproof materials by a group of experts. The investigation was not academic. The experts boarded an abandoned wartime hulk, the steamship Nantasket, anchored in Virginia's James River, and turned her into a floating laboratory. Lining her staterooms and bulkheads with various types of fire-retarding and fireproofing materials, they set fire to her a hundred times, even setting off explosions on her decks.

Out of these experiments came a new concept of what the ideal fire-resistant material is like. Materials which worked well on land proved unsuitable for ships because they were too heavy, too expensive or gave off noxious fumes when heated. The experts found that asbestos, in various forms, best met the most stringent tests.

The materials—and the principles of design—which stood up best in the blazing heat of the Nantasket experiments will be used in the construction of America's new vessel.

In planning for the proposed vessel's buoyancy and stability, the commission sought two objectives: First, to make sure that she would not sink with a hole in her hull; second, to provide such stability that even when she is partly flooded she will not capsize in a heavy sea or when under tow.

Odorless Beer.

Customs inspectors in New York are longing for a beer that shall leave no aroma, if so it may be called, upon the breath of the drinker. The inspectors are subject to a rule which forbids the drinking of alcoholic liquor during working hours, and it is explained that a glass of beer at lunch time is a violation of the rule. The objection is not to the beer, but to the effect a reminder of it might have upon passengers whose baggage was being examined.

There could be, of course, resort to the corrective clove, but that in itself would tend to create suspicion. Were there to be general use of such aromatic camouflage, New York piers might provide an atmosphere reminiscent of that of Araby the blest. Nor is it feasible to require passengers to wear gas masks while undergoing the customs inquisition. The Government rule appears to be reasonable under the circumstances, but the feelings of the inspectors are understandable.

The real solution of the problem is the discovery of an odorless beer. Were that to be made, the name of the discoverer would doubtless be given high place in the brewers' hall of fame.

Dead Horse?

FROM THE WRITINGS of Hugh Johnson and certain intimations, written and verbal, regarding the unelected powers in Washington I receive an impression of mischievous impudence, or something a little more so, which I am unable to define in certain of Mr. Roosevelt's selfless advisers.

There is a suggestion of plottings, of political imps with no responsibility tinkering with the form of government to the peril of our liberties and by vague but persistent mention of a house in Q street. I am given to wonder what goes on, anyway.

It may be remembered that there was a mysterious house in K street which figured in the disclosures of monkey business in the Harding administration and that the reporters who were on the job in those days either didn't know about this nest or were too conservative to write what they did know.

When finally, the story did come out Harding was dead and the damage was all done, so the country got nothing but a scandal, whereas a little old-fashioned reporting might have broken the story a couple of years earlier.

I SUPPOSE I show a lot of nerve suggesting that someone else should do the spade work on this job, but I am no good at this kind of reporting, and, anyway, I hardly know my way around town. I don't even know what the "Q" stands for, but it could mean Queer street.

Maybe there is no such story as I imagine, but so much hinting and winking as we see in the papers these days indicates that some people know more than they are willing to take the risk of telling without the backing of a Congressional inquiry. And, remembering how very delicately an administration committee handled the income tax mattters of the Roosevelt family after they had boldly belted around a lot of other citizens on Mr. Roosevelt's general accusation of unethical and immoral conduct, there seems to be no likelihood of an honest investigation.

Yet it is only natural to wonder who are these mysterious operators who get together at night to conspire against the Constitution under the general license of something which is referred to as the President's overwhelming mandate.

He never got any mandate to turn the Government over to a lot of persons unknown for revision in the direction of dictatorship in the guise of liberalism or progress, and if he thinks he was elected Fuehrer, then it is a good thing that some members of the party also feel aware of a mandate to head him off.

Several times I have made casual inquiries of men who are well informed on the life of the town as to who is who and what happens in the little circle of nocturnal elves, but all I hear is that they are a ring who happen to be fair-haired boys of the Administration for the time being. But the boss gets crushes on individuals and their ideas and may give them their unconditional release any time he wants to, just as he has released various others before now.

THIS IS ONLY wondering out loud, so to speak, but in doing so I have as a basis the frequent references to a clique which have appeared in the writings of Washington men who are too responsible to write from imagination and too practical to shy at spooks. Wire-tapping and keyhole work are not the function of journalism, least of all in Washington, where the ethics of the business are highest and quite superior, incidentally, to those Government departments which may desire information to use against suspected persons, including political opponents.

Not that anyone has ever suggested anything illegal in connection with this mysterious little group of serious thinkers. But there is a strong suspicion of sinister and mischevious purpose and of delight in sly tricks against the Constitution all within the Constitution, which is a stretchy document and would be more so if its interpretation were given to Supreme Court justices of that mind which saw nothing evil in the Klu Klux Klan. And if we are to have one justice of that mind it is to the credit of Congress that we aren't going to have six.

The hint and innuendo school of journalism is nowhere less respected than in the United States, notwithstanding a recent vogue in the night-life correspondence of our big cities. But one needn't see a dead horse to know he is there, and I wish some of my colleagues who have been saying "Phew!" would give a good look and tell us what they see.

Palestine Problem

Geneva Correspondent Foresees Stormy Career For British Partition Plan In View Of League and Jew-Arab Hostility.

By C. Poznanski.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Geneva.

THE FIRST WEEK of the session of the Permanent Mandates Commission is over. The session will last for a fortnight more. Nevertheless, it is already possible to draw certain conclusions as to the future of the British plan for the partition of Palestine.

The London Daily Express of July 3 declared:

Anything can happen at Geneva. How do you like the spectacle of the British colonial secretary sitting about for a two-and-a-half hour questioning by the Mandates Commission in that drab city? Mr. Ormsby-Gore is there to explain his wretched plan for the partition of Palestine. They snub him, tell him to wait (the British colonial secretary!) while they consider how we've governed Palestine.

This miserable plan gains nothing in charm or dignity as it is hawked about the palace of the League of Nations.

Leaving aside the peculiar style, these lines carry an acknowledgment that the first contact of the British colonial secretary with the commission was far from being a success of the former. Mr. Ormsby-Gore wanted the commission to begin immediately on the report of the Royal Commission and to deal with the problem of the partition of Palestine. The commission, however, decided that its first task should be to examine the administration of Palestine in the last two years.

This was thought necessary "not only because the League Covenant and the Mandate imposed this duty, but also because it was calculated to cast light upon the fundamental issue, namely, the modification of the mandatory power." And the commission decided to adopt as the basis of its work not the report of the Royal Commission, but the 1936 report on the administration of Palestine.

British Government Lost On Procedure Rule.

IT WAS on a point of procedure that the representative of His Majesty's government was defeated. Nevertheless, one must bear in mind that in the practice of the League of Nations procedure is of paramount importance. And in this particular case the difference of opinion on procedure indicates a profound difference of opinion as to the issue itself.

In adopting the latter report as the basis of its work, the commission made it clear that it does not accept in advance the conclusions of the Royal Commission that the mandate has proved unworkable and that a different solution must be sought. It wanted to ascertain previously whether the omissions of the mandatory power were not responsible for the grave situation created in Palestine.

Furthermore, Mr. Ormsby-Gore was subjected to an exceedingly severe cross-examination which lasted five to six hours a day for nearly a week. From all indications he managed fairly well. Nevertheless, it would be too sanguine to expect that the final report of the commission will simply endorse the British plan with or without modifications. What appears much more probable is that the commission will simply review the possible solutions of the problem together with their respective advantages and disadvantages, without making a clear cut recommendation to the council. And it will be the council which will be obliged to decide the question on political grounds.

Parliament's Attitude Cools Desire For Speed.

THE BRITISH government's desire for speed on the subject has slowed down considerably. Persumably the attitude of Parliament is the principal reason for this new reserve. But there may be another reason also. In his speech before the commission, Mr. Ormsby-Gore insisted that he asked only for a preliminary approval of "the form of a scheme," adding that "approval will involve negotiations with Jews and Arabs if they are willing to negotiate and will involve the preparation of a 'definite' scheme for submission to you." That means that the attitude of the Jews and of the Arabs has also to be considered.

It is known that the first reaction of the Jews as well as of the Arabs was 100 per cent negative. It is enough to remember the speeches of Lord Melchetts and Lord Samuels in the House of Lords. (By the way, this latter was bitterly attacked by Dr. Weizmann in his recent Zurich speech. Dr. Weizmann said that Lord Samuels spoke not as a Jew but as an English lord.)

The Zionist Congress sitting in Zurich showed, nevertheless, that the Jewish attitude has undergone a serious evolution. But it is not general and there was considerable disagreement in the congress.

Many members—chief among whom were the representatives of American Jewry, headed by Rabbi Stephen Wise—the immense majority of the orthodox Jews (Mizrachi) and part of the Jewish labor leaders continue to be irreconcilably opposed to any scheme of partition of Palestine. On the other hand the leaders of the Zionist movement, foremost among whom is Dr. Weizmann, the president of the Zionist organization, seem quite prepared to accept not the British proposal as it exists now, but the fundamental principle of partition.

Weizmann Warns Jews Against Hasty Rejection.

IN HIS SPEECH Dr. Weizmann very strongly opposed the British affirmation that the mandate has proved unworkable. At the same time he warned the congress not to reject the British plan without consideration and asked the congress to give its president powers for negotiations with the British government.

The reasons of this attitude are obvious. Dr. Weizmann no longer believes in the possibility of an independent Arab-Jewish Palestine with a Jewish majority. On the other hand, even a small Jewish Palestine, as contemplated by the British plan, would give the Zionists the realization of their dream—an independent Jewish state.

An Arab delegation from Palestine has been in Geneva lobbying for a refusal of the British plan. And the attitude of this delegation is completely intransigent. Nevertheless, the opposition of the Palestinian Arabs perhaps would not carry much weight. Especially if Amir Abdullah of Transjordania, who personally gains considerably by the British scheme, would support the partition.

What is much more important is the communication from the government of Iraq of July 31 distributed to the members of the Council and of the Assembly. In this communication the government of Iraq, desiring "to implement its pledge to the people of Palestine" and affirming that it has "the gravest moral responsibility towards the Arabs of Palestine," protests solemnly against the British plan. It asks for an "undivided, independent Palestine which will take its place amongst the other Arab nations," where the Jews ought to accept the position of a minority.

Jews Discount Weight Of Iraqi Communication.

IN JEWISH QUARTERS there is a tendency to minimize the importance of this Iraqi appeal. Jewish politicians explain that the reason for this appeal is to be found in the internal policy of Iraq, that it is intended to soothe Pan-Arab opposition. They affirm that neither Ibn Saoud nor the Amir Abdullah are as much opposed to the plan of partition as the Iraqi document seems to indicate.

There may be some truth in these affirmations. Nevertheless, this declaration of Iraq creates new difficulties. First of all, in view of the Arab kings' struggle for prominence, the position taken by Iraq makes it difficult for Ibn Saoud, the King of Yemen, or even Amir Abdullah himself to appear less interested in the Palestinian Arabs than the King of Iraq. Secondly, Iraq is a member of the League of Nations. It is true that the final decision will be taken by the Council of the League alone and Iraq does not sit on the Council. But the Assembly, of which Iraq is a member, has also a right to discuss the issue and the attitude of members of the Assembly may have an influence on the decision of the Council.

In these conditions it is still impossible to forecast the future of the British plan. One thing only remains certain: its path will be far from smooth.

Sterile Years

By Joseph M. Lalley

"Books And Battles."

IT IS MORE the mental impoverishment, ugly living and vile manners than the idealisms of the literary revolutionists of the 1920's that are chronicled in "Books and Battles," a smooth piece of retrospective reporting after the acknowledged pattern of "Only Yesterday." However, the authors, Irene and Allen Cleaton, make plain at the beginning that they are not attempting to write a comprehensive history of the literature of those febrile, fantastic, yet oddly sterile years; nor anything like an analysis of the revolution that occurred.

For the Cleatons the age begins precisely at the dawn of 1920 with a symbolic salvo of three sunrise guns—"Jurgen," "Main Street," "This Side of Paradise." At the signal the boys and girls swarm out of the cantonments, campuses, city rooms, finishing schools and flop houses to take the field against their bewildered papas, mammas, parsons and pedagogues. The tumult and the carnage increase until about the middle of the decade when a nostalgic fog of juniper juice and industrial alcohol pervades the whole battlefield and the skirts of the female warriors are as vestigal as the liripipe.

Then the frenzy begins gradually to subside until, by another neat coincidence, the last year of the decade approaches its close. The Young Intellectuals, now a little weary of the wars and of one another, but with the heads of Van Dyke, Irving Babbitt, Moore, Sherman, Sumner, Volstead and even poor Byron on their triumphant pikes, find themselves staring into tht "Decade of the Depression" and middle age. And so (chapter head) "Poses Fall Away" and (picture caption) "Proletarian Literature Is Born."

BUT CAN ANY revolution, even a literary revolution, be quite as simple as that? It is only when history becomes a kind of allegory that things occur so conveniently by the clock. The literary revolution of the 1920's is not so much a point in time as a mood, and moods, especially revolutionary moods, are not conceived the moment they are delivered. Also, moods, like other things, are often really dead while they seem yet alive. Long before the fateful November of 1929 the acute minds, and there were several such, among the Young Intellectuals perceived the game already was up, and that their victory over the Genteel Tradition meant only that they had challenged and vanquished a corpse.

The Genteel Tradition was dead, not because they had slain it, but because the puritanism that had sustained it had died long before. Moreover, there were signs that the free-and-easy pragmatism that pervaded all American life except literature might be dying, too. Some of the Young Intellectuals had an inkling that in the pragmatist pantheon the gods were devouring one another at altogether too rapid a rate. And they began to wonder whether gods shaped, however dimly, in the image of some unchanging human desire are not to be preferred to gods whose mutations might prove in the end disconcertingly anti-human.

SO ABOUT 1926 the intellectual air was full of an apocalyptic pessimism, queerly contrasting with the rosy gullibilities of the customers' rooms. This pessimism ultimately found expression in Mr. Joseph Wood Krutch's "The Modern Temper." Mr. Krutch, who could "never forget those things which the new barbarians will never need to have known," folded his arms in pensive stoicism and awaited the deluge. But others, like Mr. Eliot and Mr. Hicks, were beating at the gates of some remaining stronghold of simplicity and certitude, such as traditional Christianity, or millennial Leftism.

It is a testimony to the depth of hereditary American optimism that in the Young Intellectuals, for the most part, it withstood the shock and ordeal of the war—as witness the gallant effrontery of the young radicals who wanted to "capture the war." But it could scarcely survive the successive disenchantments of the peace. Searching their hearts according to the examen of Freudian analysis, they were astonished to find the latent evil that abides in all hearts and made the rash and tragic mistake of assuming that only evil abides there.

Then, turning to the outward world with eyes opened by the inward revelation, they saw too plainly the hollow pruderies and euphemistic shams behind which their elders were barricaded, and they attacked them with exultant fury. In a way it was a reversal of an older revolution represented by minds otherwise so disparate as Rousseau, Shelley and Mrs. M. B. G. Eddy. These had searched their hearts only to be intoxicated by the surfeit of goodness they found there.

• • • •

ANYHOW, THE corpse of the Genteel Tradition was awaiting to be pushed over, and the Young Intellectuals pushed. Soon, as the Cleatons show, "in the editorial chairs as well as in the newspaper critical berths, young men predominated." No longer preoccupied by any political passion, the Young Intellectuals grew suddenly aware of the harsh, materialistic, essentially shoddy civilization their fathers had built on the ruins of an incomparable natural grandeur. "Freud," as the Cleatons say, "was their strong drink." Freud had taught them that life is livable only as myth, and so they fled into fantasy.

But the revolutionists had, or thought they had, managed to pry off the lid of the human soul; and many strange fluids, hitherto unsuspected and unanalyzed outside of clinics or confessionals, could be seen bubbling within that unfathomable cauldron. The Cleatons, it might seem, give too much attention to the scum at the surface and too little to the distillations beneath it.

It is better, perhaps, that judgment should wait until the question is settled, if it ever can be, of whether or not it is better to be a lost soul than never to have had a soul to lose. Like Scott Fitzgerald's Gatsby, the Young Intellectuals had in them much that was preposterous, much that was offensive, but also something that was truly tragic.

Book Ends

AS OUR OLD Mammy used to say, "Lawsy, Lawsy, what won't them Yankees do next to make money?" . . . I am always fascinated by the various advertising tricks of the trade . . . When Mary Roberts Rinehart's "The Doctor" came out, her publishers sent to all reviewers a large capsule containing an announcement about the book . . . Last year Betty Miller's publishers ran weekly ads in the personals column of Saturday Review of Literature which had me on my tin ear until I discovered they were advance publicity for "Mother of the Bride" . . . And now Sheridan House sends me an envelope on which is typed "Helps in Reviewing 'For Immediate Release,' by Rion Bercovici," and inside are dozens of little slips of paper, each one bearing a single typewritten adjective such as "illustrious," "epic," "titanic," "fabulous" . . . I suppose they simply want to give me some faint idea of how good the book is . . .

• • • •

OGDEN NASH is not the only hard-boiled he-man to succumb to a baby in his family to the extent of writing a book about it . . . In his succinct line "A little talcum is always walcum" there is perhaps more truth than poetry . . . And now H. E. C. Bryant, known as "Buck" to dozens of his Washington newspaper colleagues, unabashedly joins Mr. Nash and writes a small pamphlet on a small boy, entitling it "A Little Despot" . . . It's a tribute to the babyish despotism of his grandson . . . The book is no bigger than a postcard but there's something about it that has the same appeal as that exquisite poem Grace Coolidge once composed to the son she lost . . .

• • • •

"RUNAROUND," says Benjamin Appel's publishers, "couldn't have come at a better time" . . . We are "releasing it August 10, flinging it right in the teeth, as it were, of the battling contestants for the big prize, the country's juiciest, fattest, political plum, the control of New York City" . . . How can people be so virile in this kind of weather?

GUY POCOCK, who tells in his new novel of a schoolmaster who retires at 50 with the intention of keeping young with the moderns, is well qualified to write on this subject . . . The Postilion

The 1937 "Rush" to California.

SACRAMENTO, CALIF., Aug. 15.—It's a grim caravan that is winding into California . . . and it's receiving a scant welcome. Evidence of its presence could be seen when the freight disgorged its human cargo at Roseville the morning I arrived in California.

TOM McCARTHY.

It was a mixed crew which crawled from the "gondolas," slid down from the car tops and dropped from the flat cars. In the entire lot . . . and there must have been 40 or 50 . . . I don't think there were more than three or four professional tramps. The professionals were those who least looked the part.

The others on that freight were workmen. They may have been itinerant workmen, but they were not the kind that rode freight for the fun in it. As the freight slowed to a stop, they dropped off wearly, shouldering their packs and directing their feet toward the land of promise.

OLD MEN and young men, most of them bore the marks of hard toil, and as you watched them walk out of the yards, you could know that they were incredibly weary. In that group there were Kansas farmhands, Mexican beet workers, silent and wrinkled Chinese, old men whose faces proudly bore the marks of "native stock" and young men whose accumulation of dust and dirt was so great that you could tell neither their nationality nor their race. If there were tramps in that crew which dropped off the train before it reached Sacramento, they were to be found among the young men. It takes youth to find an unceasing thrill in a changing scene to overlook the inconvenience of missed meals.

When I saw that train disgorge its cargo and recalled the stories I'd heard from 'boes' of the freights into California, I began to understand the State's peculiar transient problem. Our freight was not exceptional. And, if anything, it carried fewer than do most. The scene in the railroad yards at Roseville wasn't the last sight of the caravan which moves into the Western "land of promise," struggles for a while and then, wearily, retraces its steps.

AS I HITCH-HIKED into Sacramento and then through to San Francisco, I could see them on the roads. Many of them didn't even try to catch a ride. They merely walked stolidly through the heat of the Sacramento Valley.

Walking through Sacramento, following the main highway route out of the city, I could see two shoulder packs jogging above the sidewalk crowd ahead. Turning, I could see another to the rear. Rich though it may be, no State can readily absorb this constant influx which has in the past few months brought, in family loads, upwards of 30,000 people into the San Joachim Valley alone.

In only one section of the country had I found myself unable to work for a meal; but when I saw that footstore caravan trailing through Sacramento, I foresaw that the people of the city, their sympathies worn to irritation, might not be as hospitable as their apparent prosperity might warrant.

Since I had eaten a make-shift breakfast of stolen fruit and sandwiches, given me by my fellow travelers on the freight, I was not terribly hungry. However, I wanted to see just what sort of a reception I'd receive, searching for work and food.

"I'd appreciate any kind of work, mister, to get a meal." The manager didn't even bother to voice a reply to my request. He simply closed his lips tightly, looked at me hard and slowly shook his head.

There was no greater success in the second restaurant. "No can do," said the chef, "there are too many of you guys goin' by and the boss said that I shouldn't give work or food to anybody."

I pointed out to the chef that the sink was filled with dishes which needed washing, but he shook his head and said, "Boss' orders."

In the third restaurant, the result was not only unsatisfactory but almost militant. I'd barely put my foot in the door when I could see the jaws of the man behind the counter tightening for battle.

"I'd appreciate a chance to do some work, for a meal," I said. He exploded.

First he shouted "No!" Then he shook his fist. Then he went back into the kitchen muttering . . . "just because a man runs a restaurant, every bum that comes along . . ."

As I eased out the door the waitress, looking rather frightened, murmured something about "they come in all day long."

It's a scant welcome that's received by the poverty stricken, converging on California, lured by tales of the Golden West.

• • • •

RIDES WERE HARD to obtain on a highway overrun with hikers; but when I did get a lift, I asked the native Californians about the new migration.

"It's not so bad here," they told me, "but it's a real problem down in the San Joachim Valley. In time the State can and will absorb them, if they don't turn around and head out again. Right now though, it's a pretty hard nut to crack."

I guess that's what the restaurant man was trying to say when he shook his fist and headed for the kitchen to cool off.

While the headlined influx into the San Joachim Valley is made up mostly of agricultural workers and their families, every freight pulling into California carries its scattering of workers from all occupations. From San Francisco North, they are faced with an additional barrier. San Francisco is one of the strongest union towns in the Nation. It is safe to say that you don't work there unless you hold a union card.

Union cards cost money and freight-riding itinerants don't carry much of that.

I talked with one young fellow in Frisco, who had won and lost his first job in a hotel within a 24-hour period. He'd arrived broke, obtained a job but didn't have the money to immediately join the union. He lasted one day.

They simply "don't bother" with the nonunion stranger.

Permits Restored To Columbia Taxis

With payment of a Municipal Court judgment and with the posting of $11,000 insurance bonds by four of its members, all of the cabs of the Columbia Association were officially permitted to resume operation yesterday.

Through Byron G. Carson, attorney, the Municipal Court judgment was amended to involve only 8 of the 53 drivers in the association and four of them, it was shown, had severed their connection with the company prior to the suit. Carson arranged for payment of the $350 verdict returned in favor of George McNeil, 1464 T street northwest, who was injured by one of the cabs.

Federal Aid Asked In Dakota Drought

Pierre, S. Dak., Aug. 17 (AP).—Drought conditions over the western three-fourths of South Dakota were reported the worst in years today as State officials moved for increased Federal relief funds.

Gov. Leslie Jensen, who heard commissioners of 41 counties recount a dismal story of crop failures, farmers without cash and depleted county budgets, pledged support for adequate aid during the winter. Estimates that from 40 to 90 per cent of the rural families in their counties would need aid were made by the county representatives.

Farley Commends Forty-Hour Week

Fayetteville, N. C., Aug. 17 (AP).—Postmaster General James A. Farley said here today after two years of operation he had no cause to regret the 40-hour week which he approved for postal employes.

He was principal speaker at a convention of Carolina postmasters and the statement was made to postmasters only. Farley was on the program for a public address late in the afternoon.

$500,000 Orchard Sold for $15,000, Bank Suit Claims

Seeking to have an accounting of the sale of the Manor of Leeds Orchard—one of the largest apple orchards in Fauquier County, Va.—at a private sale for $15,000 when at one time it had been appraised as high as $500,000, Col. Wade H. Cooper, as president and a substantial stockholder of the defunct Continental Trust Co., yesterday sued in District Court to require J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency; Robert C. Baldwin, a former bank receiver, and John S. Bryan, former receiver for the Continental Bank, to account personally to the bank for the difference between what the farm brought and what it was actually worth.

The defendants were sued personally as well as officially.

The suit said the farm cost the bank $150,000. It consisted of 28,000 apple trees in the prime, was equipped with livestock, modern packing house, grading equipment, spraying machines, water service tanks, trucks, tractors, water pumps, and the like. There were also a number of buildings.

Col. Cooper, through Attorney George B. Fraser, estimated the sale price at only an "infinitesimal fraction" of the real value of the property. He claimed the three defendants were acting in a fiduciary capacity, knew the real value of the property, and should have held out for a better price.

Ickes Will Direct Puerto Rico Work

By the Associated Press.

The White House announced yesterday the appointment by President Roosevelt of Secretary of the Interior Ickes as Puerto Rico reconstruction administrator.

The appointment is to fill a vacancy created by the resignation of Dr. Ernest Gruening. Miles Fairbank, assistant PRRA administrator, has been acting administrator. The Puerto Rico reconstruction administration, as reorganized, becomes a unit of the Interior Department under the general supervision of Ickes in line with the President's policy of grouping independent administrative agencies in executive departments.

Secretary Ickes appointed Fairbank, regional administrator of the PRRA, as acting assistant administrator with headquarters at San Juan.

Today Is Last Day For Veto of Tax Bill

Today is the deadline on the omnibus District tax bill, which has been at the White House for nine days awaiting the President's signature.

The President has until midnight tonight to sign the bill, which has been held up because of the Tydings price maintenance rider. Unless the measure is vetoed by that time, it becomes a law regardless of whether or not it is signed.

The bill was submitted to several executive departments for analysis and was returned to the White House last Friday.

Cancer Center Bill Discussed by Bone

Provisions of the bill establishing the National Cancer Institute and providing $750,000 annually for a nationwide fight against the disease were discussed last night by Senator Homer T. Bone of Washington from Radio Station WJSV.

Senator Bone introduced the bill and secured for it the signatures of 95 colleagues. His address was broadcast over the Columbia Broadcasting System.

"One of the saddest things about this disease," he said, "is that it takes its worst toll among the poor. The man or group of men who can find the answer to the cancer enigma will be mankind's greatest benefactor."

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Aug. 17.—The Washington Post reached North End patrons about 15 minutes late this morning, but the tardiness of George Norris, the carrier, will not be marked against his record. For George, by quick thinking probably saved the lives of two persons and helped prevent the destruction by fire of the residence of R. B. Huyett, local businessman.

The carrier was delivering on his route about 5 a. m. when he observed a wisp of smoke from the rear of the Huyett home. He investigated and found a fire raging in the garage beneath the house.

First summoning the occupants, Mr. Huyett and his son, Robert, who were asleep, he ran two blocks and turned in the fire alarm.

The fire apparently started in the automobile. Firemen brought it under control before the main section of the residence had been badly damaged.

Manila Ready To Care for All U. S. Refugees

Homes and Hotels Opened; Special Committee Bans Profiteering.

By the Associated Press.

Manila, Aug. 17.—Americans and Filipinos alike made room in their homes, hotels and apartments tonight for American refugees from war-tortured Shanghai.

Expecting an influx of about 3,700 refugees, some of them destitute, beginning Thursday or Friday, the Philippine capital took quick measures designed to prevent confusion and profiteering.

Preparations were rushed to take care of the first contingent, on the Dollar liner President Jefferson. That vessel took the initial few hundred refugees from the International City amid shell fire and sailed for Manila, a distance of more than 1,000 miles. It is expected here Thursday night or Friday morning.

High Commissioner Paul V. McNutt's general co-ordinating committee reported the response to the appeal for immediate housing facilities was sufficient to care for the first arrivals. Those without funds will be transported by railroad to the summer capital, Baguio, a mountain resort a few miles north of Manila. There they will occupy a hotel leased by the committee for the purpose.

Those in need of hospital treatment will receive it at Army and Navy hospitals in Manila and other points.

Dr. Kung Concludes Arms Buying Tour

By the Associated Press.

Vienna, Aug. 17.—Dr. H. H. Kung, China's finance minister, wound up a "satisfactory" European business junket today with a shopping tour for warplanes, shells and gas masks.

Dr. Kung arranged at least three European loans for his country and obtained $50,000,000 commercial credit with the Skoda (Czechoslovakian) armament concern.

He visited munition factories of Hirtenberg and Wienerneustadt, preparatory to placing "big" orders.

After his "shopping" was finished, Dr. Kung talked excitedly of his European tour. Banging a table, he declared the trip has shown him "how great is the sympathy everywhere for China."

Ottawa, Ont., Aug. 17 (U.P.).—The Canadian government today vetoed the drastic banking measures adopted by the Alberta legislature to further the aims of the social credit government in that province.

The measures enacted by the Alberta legislature two weeks ago were designed to give Premier Aberhart's social credit government authority to control all banks and other financial institutions operating within the province through a licensing system.

All visitors, including the father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Oliva Dionne, were barred from the nursery grounds.

Plot to Murder Quezon Thwarted, Leaders Held

Manila, Aug. 17 (AP).—The Manila Bulletin said today an apparently well-laid plot by Sakdal fanatics to assassinate Commonwealth President Manuel L. Quezon upon his arrival yesterday was thwarted by detention of leaders, and a reign of terror was averted.

Agitators for immediate independence involved in recent bloody riots were rounded up 24 hours before Quezon's ship brought him from Washington.

Foreign Zone's Doom Forecast By China Expert

G. W. Professor Declares Chinese Respect for Area Lost 1932 War.

born. The French got a concession to themselves. The other foreigners went to live in what has since come to be known as the International Settlement.

Fled to Safety.

When civil strife tore China and no man was safe from musket or cannon fire, the Chinese flocked to safety. They went to the foreign settlements, whose neutrality they know would be respected.

Trade went on. The Boxer rebellion came and United States soldiers moved in with the song "Underneath the starry flag, civilize them with a Krag." Shanghai grew—grew to a city of 3,500,000 people. It grew because the Chinese knew that in the International Settlement there was safety.

Prof. Johnstone asserted that respect for these neutral zones, the International Settlement and the French concession, may have made the Chinese bow to defeat in 1932. When the fighting broke out then, he said, the Japanese landed troops in the eastern part of the International Settlement, used that Hangkew section as a base of operations.

But, the professor believes, the Chinese learned a lesson from that experience five years ago. Right now, he thinks, they will fight—even if they have to march their regiments down Bubbling Well road, through the heart of the International Settlement.

And in this battle between the two Asiatic people, he thinks, the international areas will be lost. At present they exist independent of the Chinese government. They make their own laws and pay their own taxes.

But, Prof. Johnstone said, the Chinese have long wanted to make the international areas a part of the city, a part of the greater Shanghai.

Seek Domination.

At the same time, he admitted, the Japanese have been attempting to dominate the International Settlement. Their attempt at dominance began during the World War, when Japanese trade interests expanded.

Prof. Johnstone set the value of Japanese interests in Shanghai at approximately $225,000,000. American interests are worth $100,000,000, British, $700,000,000. Principal American enterprise in Shanghai, he said, is the Shanghai Power Co., a subsidiary of the Electric Bond & Share Co. The telephone system in the international system is controlled by the International Telephone & Telegraph Co., another American enterprise.

Shanghai is the financial capital of China, a country which, Prof. Johnstone said, has really three capitals—Shanghai, Nanking and Peiping. Foreign countries maintain embassy staffs in all three cities.

The professor pointed out that the system of defense in the International Settlement was predicated on the belief that the only aggressors would be Chinese. He said that no one surmised that a member nation, such as Japan, would be an aggressor.

But now that the Japanese navy guns are roaring from the river and the Chinese are firing back, careless of the International Settlement and its residents, Prof. Johnstone believes that the almost century-old history of the international areas is at an end. The foreigners are evacuating and, he said, at the end of the war the Chinese probably will claim the right to rule the area themselves.

City Committee Named for Fete Of Constitution

Washington was assured of representation in the fete marking the 150th anniversary of the signing of the Constitution when the District of Columbia Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission yesterday selected a committee to represent the Capital.

Dr. George C. Havenner, chairman of the group, was authorized to name an executive committee. He announced sub-committees would be appointed to plan various phases of the celebration, which will start September 17, the anniversary of the signing of the Constitution, and continue through April 30, 1939, the 150th anniversary of the inauguration of George Washington as first President.

Subscriptions totaling $15,000 will be sought to pay expenses of the headquarters staff, Dr. Havenner said. Contributions were urged on local business, hotel and transportation establishments by Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen.

Ted Luther, national executive secretary of the American Expeditionary Forces reunion, which is planning a get-together here September 17, said in the committee in charge of this reunion would cooperate with the commission. President Roosevelt will speak at the Sylvan Theater on the evening of September 17, he said.

D. C. Flier's Wife Escapes Shanghai, Husband Stays On

The attractive wife of a young Washington aviator, Mrs. Arthur Kidder, of 25 Hesketh street, Chevy Chase, Md., today paced the deck of the S. S. President Roosevelt, now en route to Manila, Philippine Islands, from the flaming inferno of Shanghai.

Behind her, in a city ringed by fire and steel, was her husband, a pilot for Pan-American Airways.

Word of Mrs. Kidder's safe departure from the shell-wracked metropolis of the Far East was conveyed to her husband's mother, Mrs. Arthur Kidder, sr., here through a United Press dispatch.

Aviator Kidder, his mother revealed, piloted Mme. Chiang Kai-shek, Wellesley-educated wife of the Chinese generalissimo, when she flew to the kidnaped dictator's rescue in bleak Sian last year.

Military Revolt Put Down in Iraq

Baghdad, Iraq, Aug. 17 (AP).—A military insurrection at Mosul was reported ended today, easing a dangerous political turmoil growing out of the assassination of two high military officers.

Gen. Sekr Sidki Pasha, chief of the general staff, and Col. Mohamed Ali Jawad, air force chief, were shot to death last Wednesday by a soldier at Mosul, 220 miles northwest of here.

Reliable sources here said the commanding officer of troops in the area refused to carry out the orders by the cabinet of Premier Hikmet Suleiman to arrest army officers suspected of complicity in the assassinations.

Vienna, Aug. 17.—Government agencies participated in a monarchist activity today for the first time since the World War—services commemorating the fiftieth birthday anniversary of the late Emperor Karl.

These included a broadcast over the government-controlled radio station and a meeting of the Iron Guard, a legitimist organization, and the progovernment political association, the Fatherland Front.

Baron Karl von Werkmann, who was Karl's secretary, spoke at both functions.

Eugene Troupe of Aerialists at Shoreham

Circus Troupe Follows Bruin At Shoreham

Bar Stunts to Entertain Diners; Parisian Cocktails at the Lotus.

By Chanticleer

The bear has gone—but the sawdust lingers on. Meaning that the Shoreham presents another circusy act this week with the Bob Eugene Troupe, formerly associated with Ringling Brothers, Barnum and Bailey Circus, taking the spotlight with some daredevil aerial bar stunts, lightning-like triple horizontal bar stuff far above the heads of the diners on the terrace.

And special tonight only: Gordon Hittenmark presents his nine finalists in the "Miss Washington" contest. The lucky winner, as viewed by the judges in bathing suits and in furs, goes to Atlantic City for a crack at the title of "Miss America." Tonight at 9 o'clock.

The largest ballroom in these summery parts is the Spanish Garden, at Glen Echo Park. Or, at least, so we're told. David McWilliams and his ork and Kitty Simons play and sing nightly, 9 to midnight, with special programming Wednesday night and a "ladies free" night next Monday.

A spy reports he tried out the chicken dinner at Boulevard Farms just to check up a bit and had to be thrown out because his enthusiasm was carrying him into a state of possible indigestion. After all, there's a limit to the tummy's capacity. The chicken is wonderful, he says.

Parisian Cocktails is on view this week at the Lotus, featuring the novelty kidding number, "Yoo Hoo in Your Eyes," and another called "Indians on Broadway." Bougard and Dooley show something new in soft shoe and fast challenge dancing, and others on the bill are the Kinneys, Jack and Betty; Beatrice Churan's slave dance, and Edna Murphy and Marion Dawn in specialties.

Jimmy Crandall has gone into quite a dither over his new fans. No, not the kind Sally made famous. Just old-fashioned fans that keep the customers at his Southeast gathering spot comfortably cool these days.

Last of the "Quest for Talent" auditions will be held tomorrow night at Wardman Park—open to Government employes—with the finals scheduled for August 26. Featured this week in the Metronome Room is Amy Orent, of the Internal Revenue Bureau, singing blues ditties. Mrs. Claude Pepper, wife of the Florida Senator, will be among the judges tomorrow night.

Cuba Envoy Lauds Cut in Rice Duty

Cuban Ambassador Martinez Fraga said the recent reduction of duty in Cuba on rice grown in the United States "has been a great satisfaction to me because it demonstrates the good will of the Cuban government toward our great American market."

The Ambassador, who played an important part in the negotiation which led to opening a larger market in Cuba for American-grown rice, added in a statement:

"Mr. Amadeo Lopez, secretary of agriculture of Cuba, is, to a great extent, responsible for that advantageous and just measure, which I am sure will be purely recognized by American public opinion as a new and disinterested gesture of a good neighbor."

Bill to Settle Accident Claim On U. S. Vetoed

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt vetoed yesterday a Senate bill authorizing settlement of claims of $10,800 of four persons for fatal and personal injuries suffered in an automobile collision with a Government truck in Pittsylvania County, Va., November 9, 1935.

The bill would have directed the Treasury to pay $5,000 to the estate of H. Lee Shelton, $2,500 to the estate of Mrs. Shelton, $3,000 to Mrs. J. R. Scruggs and $300 to Mrs. Irvin Johnson.

"An entirely different situation would be presented," Mr. Roosevelt said, "if this bill were confined to a grant of jurisdiction over these claims to the Court of Claims or a United States District Court."

Doubts U. S. Legal Duty.

The President said the Shelton car, with Mrs. Scruggs and Mrs. Johnson as passengers, was struck by a Soil Conservation Service truck on a State highway. Suits were brought in the Virginia State courts against the driver of the Government truck and judgments were recovered aggregating $15,300.

"It appears," the President said, "that the principal basis for finding of negligence on the part of the driver of the Government truck was that he failed to comply with the local regulations requiring side lights on trucks exceeding a certain specified width.

"In the light of the decisions of the Federal courts there is grave doubt, to say the least, as to whether the Federal Government is required to equip its vehicles with the accessories required by State or local regulations."

Vetoes Air Corps Gratuity.

The President also vetoed a bill which would have granted a $1,575 gratuity to Agnes Ewing Harter, widow of First Lieut. Albert E. I. Harter, of the Army Air Corps Reserve, who was killed while voluntarily participating in a training flight.

Mr. Roosevelt renewed his recommendation that Congress consider the conditions affecting use of reservists as compared to 1919 when the gratuity law was passed, with a view to remedying any inequalities and inequities.

Painters Victory Called Step in Labor Progress

Complete satisfaction with the decision of Carl R. Schedler, special referee for the Brotherhood of Painters, Decorators and Paperhangers of America, Local 368, in their dispute with the Counes & Raptis Corporation was expressed by Harry S. Wender, the local's representative, in a letter sent yesterday to Secretary of Labor Perkins.

"The manner in which the hearings on this complaint were conducted," the letter read, "was dignified, impartial and far-reaching in scope. The wisdom and fairness of the decision is apparent to all who read it . . . it represents a milestone on the road of labor progress made possible under the Davis-Bacon act."

Changes in Park Landscape Held Factor in Death of Trees

Expert Says Additional Layer of Soil Placed Over Roots Helped Underground Water Kill Two Beeches and Magnolia.

Landscape changes and rough treatment during the PWA "rehabilitation" program helped a bad underground water condition bring death to two beeches and a magnolia in Lafayette Park, Malcolm Kirkpatrick, chief landscape architect with National Capital Parks, said last night.

The beech roots were smothered from the top by an eight-inch layer of top soil and hyperhumus put on to make the park surface level with the old concrete walks after they were covered by a new bituminous composition.

"We thought the layer put on was sufficiently porus to let air to the roots and also to suport growing grass," he said. "Evidently it was heavy and close enough to shut off air. The beech is a super-sensitive tree."

Another Likely to Die.

Kirkpatrick said he considered the other beech lost, since more of its leaves are dying each day.

In an effort to save a huge and rare European beech—some branches of which already are affected—the park service has scooped out the earth around it to a depth of approximately one foot.

Kirkpatrick said he thought this specimen would live and he personally felt the scooped out bowl should be permitted to remain for the time being, covered by some light ground cover planted in a bed so as to prevent its being packed down.

When plans for the park change were being drawn they included the removal of the magnolia trees. When the workmen began their digging on the tree that has since died, however, Kirkpatrick said, they found the original roots had been rotted from a stagnant underground water condition.

Water Also Factor.

"The tree had rehabilitated itself by sending out an adventitious system of roots that were widely spread and near the surface. We decided against moving them, but this magnolia evidently had treatment a little too rough for it."

"To the average observer it looks as if the changes we made killed the trees and it may be that we imposed conditions the trees could not stand. To be perfectly fair, however, the underground water must be considered.

"We have been bothered with the water condition for a long time. For instance, I have been here four years and in that time we have lost two sets of Christmas trees in the park. The third set does not appear any too sturdy."

Mixing of Boys With Criminals Attacked Here

D. C. Parole Board Asks for Social Worker in Reformatory.

Intermingling of first offenders with hardened criminals at the Lorton Reformatory was condemned "from every viewpoint" yesterday by the Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole in its report for the fiscal year ended June 30.

Many young men confined to the institution, the board charged, have never had an opportunity to become good citizens. A competent social worker is needed to act as the board's representative within the reformatory, the report stated.

Pointing out that only two field officers are now employed to supervise 368 parolees, the board urged a drastic expansion in personnel.

Parolees Revoked.

"The inadequacy of our staff," said the report, "creates a serious situation and one that demands correction in the interest of assuring adequate protection to the public."

Of the total parolees under its supervision, 26 had their paroles revoked and 11 committed new crimes, the board said.

The board also had under its supervision during the year 659 men "conditionally released"—men automatically released by law at the end of their "short terms." These men, however, must remain under the board's supervision until expiration of their maximum sentences.

Of the men in this group, the report said, 78 had their conditional releases revoked—including 25 who committed serious new crimes.

During the year, 95 prisoners were honorably discharged from parole and warrants were issued for 36 violators. In the conditional release class, however, 245 successfully terminated their releases and warrants were issued for 121.

The total cost of parole work last year, it was pointed out, was approximately $14,000—an average of $38 per parolee and $13.80 by including releases.

CONTRACT BRIDGE

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson.

Maintaining Communication.

In the defense against notrump the establishment of a long suit is of paramount importance. It is often the case that only one of the defenders has a long suit. If that player also has most of the high cards in the possession of his side, the defense is likely to be a simple matter of using every available entry to batter out stoppers and eventually run the long suit. But when the other defender has most of the high cards for his side, it is up to him to co-operate with his partner in order to make possible the establishment and running of the long suit. One of the most effective devices toward such an end is East's play to the first trick in the deal below.

Neither side vulnerable.

	♠ 10 6 ♡ K J 7 ◇ A Q 10 4 3 ♣ A 8 7
♠ J 9 7 6 2 ♡ 8 5 3 2 ◇ 6 5 ♣ 4 2	West / North / East / South	♠ A Q 8 ♡ 10 9 4 ◇ K 8 2 ♣ J 10 9 3
	♠ K 4 3 ♡ A Q 6 ◇ J 9 7 ♣ K Q 6 5

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ◇	Pass
1 N T	Pass	3 N T	Pass
Pass	Pass

West opened the six of spades. While declarer glanced briefly at the dummy to take stock of assets and liabilities, East did some thinking. When South played a low spade from the dummy, East unhesitatingly played the Queen of spades.

Notice the quandary in which South was placed. A successful diamond finesse would yield more than enough tricks for the game. But if it failed, the running of the spade suit against him might be fatal. If the clubs broke 3-3 he could afford to take the first spade and refuse the diamond finesse. Had he been sure that East had the Ace of spades it would have been simple for South to refuse to win the first or second spade trick. After winning the third spade trick he could afford to take the diamond finesse without fear. But to refuse the first spade trick after East played the Queen was to risk the loss of the entire spade suit. East's play of the Queen of spades might mean that West's suit was headed by the Ace and Jack.

Declarer finally decided to take the King of spades, but from that point on had no play for his contract. The diamond King was offside and the clubs failed to break. East was bound to get in with his club or diamond, after which he could lay down the Ace and a low spade, to let West run the rest of that suit.

Note that East's play on the first trick maintained communication between the East-West hands. Had East played the Ace of spades and followed it up, South would have held up until the third round and would have made his contract.

An Appeal

FOR FAIR PLAY AND DEMOCRACY IN BEHALF OF THE UNEMPLOYED

From all parts of the country today thousands of unemployed and laid-off WPA workers are preparing to come to Washington. They will be part of the National Job March sponsored by the Workers' Alliance of America. Representatives of the 727,000 WPA workers who are being laid off, they will be in Washington to urge Congress to restore their WPA jobs until they find employment in private industry.

The thousands of unemployed and WPA workers who will be here are law-abiding Americans, men and women who have suffered through the years of the depression. They face once again the prospect of existence on inadequate relief or dependence on the breadlines because of the present WPA curtailment program.

They do not desire to make this trip, enduring the sacrifices and hardships of the road and the discomforts here. They would prefer to remain at home. They feel compelled, however, to make their voices heard in the Nation's Capital because they find conditions at home unendurable. They come to the Congress of the United States asking only for the right to work, to earn their living by the sweat of their brow instead of living on the dole or the breadline.

There is now before Congress the Schwellenbach-Allen Joint Congressional Resolution, whose passage would make it possible to remedy the injustice done the 727,000 families. The Resolution would prohibit the discharge of any WPA workers who cannot find employment in private industry. It would encourage WPA workers to seek temporary private employment by granting them furloughs instead of dropping them from the WPA rolls.

The introduction of this Resolution into Congress has been greeted by a tremendous Nation-wide public support. Many Governors, the United States Conference of Mayors, hundreds of important international and local trade unions, city councils and civic bodies have gone on record in support of the Schwellenbach-Allen Resolution. Thirty United States Senators and 168 Representatives in Congress have publicly announced their support of the Resolution. It was reported to the United States Senate with a unanimously favorable vote by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor. It has been approved by the Works Progress Administration.

With wide public demand that this Resolution be passed and that WPA layoffs be stopped, a small handful of Congressmen are attempting to kill this Resolution by ignoring it. In the House of Representatives, the Schwellenbach-Allen Resolution is in the Appropriations Committee, which referred it to the Sub-Committee on Deficiencies, headed by Congressman Woodrum, of Virginia. Mr. Woodrum and his colleagues, who are demanding the liquidation of WPA, have declared that they will refuse to take any action on this Resolution, pro or con. They refuse to permit any hearings to allow interested bodies of citizens to express their viewpoint. We are told, furthermore, that although 16 of the 39 members of the Appropriations Committee are on record for this Resolution, "Congressional etiquette" does not permit even the full Appropriations Committee to withdraw this Resolution from the Sub-Committee on Deficiencies unless Mr. Woodrum consents.

The Workers' Alliance of America is ready to cancel the National Job March to Washington if the Schwellenbach-Allen Resolution is passed. The only obstacle to its passage today is the unrelenting attitude of Mr. Woodrum and his reactionary colleagues. Shall "Congressional etiquette" deprive 727,000 WPA workers of their jobs and plunge more than three million men, women and children into misery?

The report of the United States Conference of Mayors issued by its President, Hon. Fiorello H. LaGuardia, Mayor of the City of New York, that 75 per cent of those recently discharged have had to apply for local relief, indicates that jobs in private industry are not available to them. In hundreds of cities, discharged WPA workers have gone from office to office and factory to factory in job hunts, and thus far to our knowledge, have been unable to procure a single job.

We are confident that the majority of Congress of the United States responsive to the wishes of the American people do not wish to inflict unnecessary hardship and suffering upon those who are unemployed through no fault of their own; and that they desire the passage of the Schwellenbach-Allen Resolution before Congress adjourns. We know that the members of Congress do not wish to return to their home towns and inform the thousands of laid off workers that some petty rule or etiquette of Congress keeps them on the breadline.

The discharged WPA workers are unable any longer to suffer in silence. The National Job March is made necessary by the unjustifiable stand of Mr. Clifton Woodrum and a few others who would block the needs of so many American families.

We ask the members of Congress to voice their protests against the inaction of the few who block the way to the passage of the Resolution. We ask Congress not to adjourn before this Resolution is passed by both Houses. If the Appropriations Committee continues its refusal to act, we ask the support of all Congressmen who are sympathetic to the plight of their fellow citizens to support action under a suspension of the rules.

We ask the people of Washington to be understanding of their fellow citizens who will be in Washington as part of the National Job March. They are men and women, just like yourselves, with the same desires and hopes, only they are not fortunate enough to have jobs.

We ask you to welcome them here, knowing that jobs for them mean more purchasing power, improved morale, a better Nation.

We ask your support for the Mass Meeting at the Sylvan Theatre (near Washington Monument) Monday evening, August 23rd, at 8 P. M., as the expression of the citizens of Washington and the vast majority of the members of Congress against the tyranny of a few in the halls of Congress.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New York, Aug. 17.

ALICE HUGHES.

ARE YOU infested with street-walking pickets as we are? This will be known in American history as the great picket-era. The labor demonstrations here have attained a point where it is literally almost impossible to walk along certain highways through the crowds of sign toters who are rebelling against the cruel and inhuman treatment of restaurant keepers, hirers of bug-chasers, painting contractors and dockyard owners.

In this department I am a newspaper woman and no side-taker. I am not unaware of the problems of the toiling masses and the woes of employers—but I am a reporter first, last and always, as it should be. And after observing and reporting on these mass demonstrations for a long time, I am forced to say that about the most annoying and pestiferous pickets in Gotham are women.

They have learned and perfected a magnificent technique in this matter of harassing employers and workers, permanent and temporary. In every local picket line which is smartly run the first rank is invariably held by the ladies—presumably wives of the striking gentlemen. They are usually large, loud and lusty sisters. If bricks are to be wafted they have magnificent pitching arms, and at times can nick mounted coppers at a hundred feet. Most of all, they utter the best noise. They make vulgar faces at pickets and law alike, and they shout mean cracks in language which at times is hardly high class and elegant. Yes, the ladies are swinging doughty blows for the striking masses, and they look and sound simply awful while doing it, but everything goes to boost what labor agitators call the movement. The means, according to the classic fallacy, justify any end—and I refer you to the wholesale purges and liquidations of life in the Soviet Union.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—The reports of domestic discord between Margaret Mitchell, Atlanta's famous author of "Gone With the Wind," and Spouse John Marsh are evil canards. They are happy, en rapport and prosperous, and please give the lie direct to any contrary rumor . . . This is something of an anniversary in my own comrade's life, as it was 20 years ago today that he approached a recruiting sergeant in Cleveland and offered to fight and die for his country. The scales recorded him at a mere 119 pounds, but he went to a drinking fountain, inhaled a gallon of water and finally reached the required 120, so he was allowed to go to war with the ole Fifth Ohio. He proposes to celebrate tonight by singing 50 verses of "Hinky, Dinky, Parley-vous." Naturally, I shall have all the windows closed, as some of them are—well, not for the ears of women, children and the clergy.

Now and then a sassiety boy comes down with an idea other than having a couple of quick ones. For instance, Bob Leonard and Robert MacBein, of our tony set, recently got the notion of publishing a dear day-book called "My Social Diary." Not only will it have dates and blank pages, but on the proper days of 1938 will say "National Horse Show opens today" or "First day to fall off jumping horse legally." They are expected to go like, say, hot cakes among the busy ladies who just can't remember off-hand all the vital dates of current history. It also will list the current dates, and so should sell well at Harvard and our other Ivy colleges.

The alarming news that the quintuplets all had colds no doubt sent us all into mild panics. I thought of the immortal words of the poet—"'Twas there that darling Emilie stood, and sneezed the sneeze heard round the world." Could it have been Emerson, or Doc Dafoe?

Our ladies who make a brilliant career of dressing smartly for luncheons, in spite of the humidity, are filling the snootier lunch wagons these days with frothy black chiffon frocks. Check the Colony Restaurant, and you'll find it parctically a required uniform. Most of the dresses I've seen have been very beautiful—and if the elegant lunchers have to run to a type, I must say that at the moment they've picked a honey!

Fall Shoes, Whether Tailored or Dress-up, Are Ladylike

All Are Higher in Front and Have Trimming, Black Suedes Lead.

By Ethel Ehlen.
The Post Fashion Editor.

NEW YORK, Aug. 17.—Afoot with the fall parade of fashions are the smart new shoes, styled with individuality, comfort and chic. To accompany black and dark frocks during late summer and early fall, are the soft-toed shoes, which are steadily gaining in popularity. Shoes of all types and materials were never smarter; Oxford ties have assumed new contours, pumps are exceedingly chic, walking shoes have become more ladylike, and afternoon footwear is swathed in glove-fitting bands to complement the popular corselet-styled frocks.

Black suede leads in shoe materials; either all-suede or combined with patent or reptile leathers. Small perforation designs are much in evidence and there is an amazing trend toward grosgrain as a suede shoe trimming. Silver kid and black satin pipings are noted on shoes of the latest step-in styles. Winged tongues cling to the foot to promote slimness; other tongue effects feature softly rolled suede in a flat styling. For life about town, heels may be either high or medium.

To harmonize with the high hats and short skirts, shoes are built higher in the front. Side cut-outs and off-side effects lend interest and sophistication to shoes which accompany afternoon frocks. Oxford ties of both high and medium heels have gone complicated and appear with cut-outs, black satin braiding and swathed-like inserts of suede in contrasting colors.

Suede with patent leather underlay for striking contrast, fashions the low, square-heeled shoe (extreme left). The accompanying shoe is of suede and alligator calfskin. For dressier occasions, the two shoes below, of suede with satin braiding; both are high-cut, one has side closing strap.

A new type tailored coat-dress of acele crepe in black, port wine, boxwood green and star sapphire blue, dramatized by a colorful ascot scarf and smart buttons down entire front. The low and medium-heeled shoes (top of page), are ideal accompaniments for a frock of this styling. The smart accessories are black.

Today's HEALTH TALK

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

Proper Shaving Methods

IN THE LAST two days we have outlined the details of the findings of the Mellon Instiute research on the factors in safe and comforable shaving. There is plenty of reason for calling attention to this, for aside from minor discomforts, shaving can result in severe infections. I know of one death ascribed to general Stahlycoccic infection which started with an ingrown hair. In the last two articles we gave the reasons for the conclusions, which involved explanations of experiments, and so perhaps today it would be well to give a general summary of what constitutes a safe and comfortable shave.

To obtain the most satisfactory shave two factors are necessary, and they are of equal importance—proper preparation and a good razor.

Wash the face first with soap and water, using hot water and soap that does not irritate the skin. Do this for half a minute, then rinse. This removes grit and other material which might dull the dazor or interfere with the action of the shaving soap.

Then apply shaving soap (or cream) rubbing in well with the fingers, using plenty of water. Then whip into a thorough lather with the shaving brush, with hot water. The hotter the water the more rapid and complete the preparation.

If a latherless cream is used it should be applied on top of the soap lather which results from the first cleansing. Whether to use a latherless cream or a soap is largely a matter of taste, though it is said that the latherless creams are slower in their softening action than the soap.

The purposes of preparation are (1) to modify the hard condition of the hair shaft, (2) lubrication of the razor blade, (3) providing a stiff supporting medium for the hair shaft so the razor can attack it, protection of the skin from cuts and bruises, and securing the antiseptic action of the soap.

Begin shaving by wetting the razor. Both the razor and the face should be wet all the time. Razor blade sharpness and the shaving angle are the most important items in comfort. An angle of about 25 degrees is the best for most people, but there are individual variations.

For a hypersensitive face two modifications are suggested: The use of cold water for lathering and the use of a "cool" shaving soap—i. e., one having menthol in it.

The use of a lotion following shaving is to control small points of bleeding, to provide an antiseptic and astringent action, and to replace a protective covering removed by the disappearance of fat and skin debris by the preparation. Talcum powder does the last well.

Discomfort and the production of a tender face during shaving is due to (1) dull blades, (2) the adoption of an improper shaving angle of the razor blade, (3) inadequate preparation, (4) stretching the skin too much, (5) going against the grain.

Eight Glove Colors For Coming Season

Eight glove colors for late fall and early spring have just been chosen by the Textile Color Card Association in collaboration with its glove color committee, according to an announcement made by Margaret Hayden Rorke, managing director of the color organization.

The five new colors are:

College Girls Like Black for Evening Wear

These facts ahve been revealed in a survey by Vogue, fashion magazine, among senior girls of 137 colleges and among college men editors at Harvard, Yale, Princeton and Columbia Universities.

The girls were questioned on a wide variety of clothes problems, the men only on what type of dress had the most pulling power at a prom. The survey was made among the college girls competing for the annual Prix de Paris offered by the magazine.

The ideal college wardrobe, as outlined by the girls consists of 13 dresses and six "bras." The Vogue questionnaire disclosed girls also need four coats, an evening wrap, a three-piece suit, five sweaters, three skirts, ten pairs of shoes, five hats, three handbags, nine pairs of panties, five slips, three girdles, six pairs of pajamas and two robes. The average cost of the ideal college wardrobe came to $508.

Other campus information, brought to light by the survey, shows that girls like to wear their cardigan sweaters backwards and they knot large kerchiefs under their chins to keep their hair in place. They have taken over "beer jackets" from the men. Girls in the co-educational colleges of the Middle West put more emphasis on dressing through the day than those in Eastern girls' schools.

First Prize Is Awarded to Frederick Woman For Her Recipe for Corn Chowder Bisque

By Rebekah Blake.

THE VERSATILE uses to which corn, one of the main vegetables now on the market, can be put was revealed in The Post's recipe contest of last week. There were recipes for corn soups of various kinds, corn biscuits, muffins, fritters, corn relish, salad and pickles, corn dumplings, corn souffles, baked, boiled and fried corn.

The first prize of $3 was awarded to Mrs. Arthur Rhoades, 520 Elm street, Frederick, Md., for her recipe on "Corn Chowder Bisque." For her recipe on "Corn Biscuits" that was cleverly illustrated, Mrs. Charles D. Allen, of 5812 Thirty-second street northwest, Washington, received the second prize of $2.

To Mrs. E. Nussbaum, 1210 Perry street northeast, Brookland Courts, Washington went the third prize of $1 for recipe, "Corn Loaf." Mrs. O. L. Henderickson, 3 Englewood road, Hagerstown, Md., won the fourth prize of $1 on her "Corn Relish" (for winter) recipe and the fifth prize, also $1, went to Mrs. E. Roselle Hunter, 3831 Garfield street northwest, Washington, for her recipe, "Corn Croquettes."

Mrs. Rhodes' recipe:

Corn Chowder Bisque.

2 slices salt pork, diced
4 small onions, minced
6 medium potatoes, cubed
4 tomatoes, peeled and diced
2 teaspoonfuls salt
¼ teaspoonful pepper
1 pint boiling water
2 cupfuls corn (fresh)
¼ teaspoonful soda
1 quart hot milk
1 tablespoonful flour
1 tablespoonful butter or margarine

Fry pork in chowder kettle until light brown and crisp. Remove from the heat, add onions, potatoes, tomatoes, salt and pepper. Cover with boiling water and simmer until vegetables are nearly tender. Add corn and cook ten minutes longer. Add the soda and hot milk which has been slightly thickened with the flour and fat. Stir rapidly while adding milk and serve hot.

Mrs. Allen's recipe:

Corn Biscuits.

The following recipe is an ideal way to make use of the corn left on the few cobs from a previous meal:

2 cups sifted flour
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup corn cut from cob
2 teaspoons baking powder
4 tablespoons butter or other shortening
¾ cup of milk

Sift flour once, measure, add baking powder and salt, sift again. Cut in shortening. Mix corn in thoroughly so that each grain is separated. Add milk gradually, stirring until soft dough is formed. Turn out on slightly floured board and knead enough to shape. Roll ½ inch thick and cut with floured 2-inch biscuit cutter. Bake on ungreased baking sheet in hot oven (450 degrees F.) 12 to 15 minutes. Makes 16 biscuits.

Mrs. Nussbaum's recipe:

Corn Loaf.

2 cups fresh scraped corn
12 crackers rolled
Salt and pepper
½ cup milk
½ cup English walnuts, chopped
1 egg beaten

Combine all ingredients and pour into a buttered baking dish. Sprinkle with crumbs—dot freely with butter, dust with paprika and bake in a slow oven for half an hour. Serve hot. This is also good sliced when cold and fried like mush and served with maple syrup.

Mas Hendericksson's recipe:

Corn Relish (for Winter).

Grind 1 large head of cabbage
4 large onions
4 green peppers
6 red peppers
Corn scraped from 20 ears of young corn. Add to this mixture the following and bring all to the boiling point:
1½ cups vinegar
¼ cup salt
4 cups cider vinegar
Then add 3 more cups of vinegar and a mixture consisting of:
3 tablespoons dry mustard
1 tablespoon tumeric
½ cup flour
1 tablespoon celery seed

Cook for 30 minutes. Pour in jars and seal while very hot.

Mrs. Hunter's recipe:

Corn Croquettes.

To a thick cream sauce, add fresh corn cut from cob, ground cooked meat (pork, beef or ham), pimentos cut up fine, grated cheese and onion juice and a hard boiled egg cut up. Shape into croquettes, dip in egg batter, then roll in cracker crumbs. Fry in deep fat.

Cocktail Popcorn.

Sprinkle finely grated cheese over hot popcorn and serve it with cocktails. Popcorn prepared in this way may be freshened by heating it in the oven for five minutes.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

When 'Informally Engaged' to One Girl, Should Man Court Another Who Once Refused Him?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have an "understanding" with a man whom I have known a year and whom I find quite admirable in most ways. We are not formally engaged because we cannot be married for about 15 months and neither of us believes in long engagements, which I think you will agree is the correct attitude. However, we have discussed our plans for the future, our home, etc., and fully intend to be married.

• • • •

Now, this is my problem: This man has gone home for a month to a distant city. There is a girl there with whom he was deeply in love at one time and to whom he proposed marriage. She refused him, however, because she loved another. A continuous correspondence has kept them close and the man sends her expensive Christmas gifts, each better than any he has given me so far. He admits that he still loves her, but now only in a "brotherly way," however. He has told me frankly that he has every intention of seeing her and taking her out.

• • • •

Since neither of us has had dates with others since we became seriously interested, do you think he should wine and dine this girl? Especially since we have been economizing on our entertainment with a view to the future? I have never been jealous in my life and I am not jealous now. But I don't think he is being fair; especially since he told me he would probably "drop" me if I were to revive any of my old beaux.

• • • •

Although I earn an unusually high salary for a girl, I don't seem to be blessed with a superabundant amount of histrionic ability and can't seem to play my part well nor to devise the correct character to assume in dealing with this situation. Without arousing his jealousy, I managed to convey to him my feeling on the subject and he readily agreed that my attitude was just. Nevertheless, he proceeds to follow his original intentions.

• • • •

Now, Miss Haworth, if I am wrong, I am willing to admit it and swallow my pride, for I have always been amenable to reason. But if he is wrong, what shall I do? I have been an assiduous reader of your column for some months and will accept your worthy judgment in this matter. Sincerely yours, SUSIE.

• • • •

What to Believe.

DEAR SUSIE: Your fiance's attitude is wrong and a little too highhandedly selfish to be meekly tolerated. He's too smug, conceited and sure of himself where you are concerned. He needs to be taken down a couple of pegs; to have his allegiance put to the test; to be confronted baldly with the challenge: "Do you love me enough to play squarely, or do you not?" He damns himself in taking privileges which he won't concede to you.

• • • •

You aren't being fair to yourself in magnanimously tolerating his quasi-courtship of the other girl, while giving up all masculine attention save his. When it was fully understood between you that he intended seeing the other girl on his visit home: that you objected to his doing so; that he realized your objections were justified, and still proposed to override them, you should have said something to this effect:

• • • •

"Now that we understand each other on that point, we might as well reach a further understanding. What's sauce for the gander is sauce for the goose. I'm not jealous. I think you know that. But neither am I a fool or a patient Griselda. I believe in fair play. Since you are determined to see that girl, regardless of how I feel, I withdraw any objections I may have made. But only because I expect to suit my actions to yours, and then see where we come out. While you are gone, I expect to be going out with other men; and if you want to 'drop' me when you get back—. Well, we'll talk about that then."

• • • •

Since he admits he loves the other girl, corresponds with her constantly and sends her more expensive gifts than he gives you, you might as well face the fact that his devotion to you isn't of the first water. If she should see fit to reverse her original rejection and accept his one-time proposal of marriage, I wonder just where that would leave you? I think you had better prepare to meet such an emergency by acquiring some sort of stag line of your own during his absence. So long as he refuses to make your happiness his first consideration and there is the prospect of a long engagement ahead, that is the only common-sense thing to do.

• • • •

I don't think you should attempt to shoulder full responsibility for making the partnership go; nor should you indulge in petty economies if he wastes the savings thus accrued on expensive gifts for the other girl. If he continues to lavish attention on her following this visit, though the medium of frequent correspondence and gifts, I believe you would be justified in threatening to break the engagement. Tell him you refuse to be second fiddle.

H. M.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

About The Town

With Dudley Harmon.

Because Capt. Robert Muir's father wanted him to see the world from a sailing boat when he was 13 years old, he took Robert in a schooner from South Africa all the way to Buenos Aires. The captain has been going places in a sailboat ever since, and is now about to discover the only place he hasn't been—the western coast of South America.

He is setting sail the middle of October in a 110-foot ketch to round Cape Horn, the first such trip in 70 years.

Yesterday I had the pleasure of meeting Capt. and Mrs. Muir over an old-fashioned at the beautiful Georgetown home of Ralph Snowden Hill. About six of us sat in the playroom overlooking the walled garden and heard the English captain and his American wife tell of their proposed trip.

"It all sounds very romantic unless you happen to be the purser," said Mrs. Muir, with a sigh. She is in charge of all the financial arrangements as well as being elected to take care of the provision end of things. At present the Muirs are living on their ketch which is anchored near Hains Point.

Each one of the six passengers on the Ketch will be doing something useful en route to Cape Horn and back. Capt. Muir has several articles lined up, one man is going to make hydrographic surveys for the Government, and there will be a representative along from the National Geographic Society. In fact, so many people have sighed wistfully that they wished they could go along, too, that Capt. Muir is thinking now of taking along a schooner which would hold another six.

After Valparaiso, Mrs. Muir will be the only woman aboard. The other two are getting off there to go across the country and write up their experiences. It was hard to imagine the captain's wife in sailing togs yesterday as she sat in a comfortable chair looking very calm and collected in a navy blue lace frock with a broad brimmed black hat.

The Muirs are planning to stop at all sorts of exotic places which you would not be likely to visit except on a trip of this type—the wild coast of Pategonia, for instance. Next May will see them back in this country, and then Capt. Muir hopes to try his luck in the most sail-conscious part of these here United States—New England.

WITH AN INTERVIEW with Mrs. J. Borden Harriman tucked in her pocket, Barbara Wright will return to this country in two or three weeks. She made a special trip to Norway to see the Minister, having spent the summer gathering material for future articles . . . The Richard Sangers have left for Yellowstone Park, going by train instead of motor, as most people do. On their return they hope to move into their new home near Westmoreland Hills, which is almost ready . . . Robert Huse, of the Social Security, Board, and Mrs. Huse are leaving for Cambridge, Mass., in September. Mr. Huse will teach for three months at the new school for government service there.

MRS. HENRY CABOT Lodge, jr., is less optimistic than those observers who are always forecasting a speedy adjournment of Congress. Having patiently waited around all summer for the legislators to call a halt, she has at last given up hope and gone to her summer home at Beverly, Mass., this time for good. Senator Lodge will join her there when all the optimistic predictions come true.

Greek Play In D. C. Aim Of Visitor

Mme. Eva Sikelianou May Present Drama She Revived.

The Post Club Editor.

Mme. Eva Sikelianou, an American woman who is bringing back to America the ancient culture of Greece, the country of her adoption, is the guest for several weeks of Mr. and Mrs. Edouard Albion at their home on Bradley lane. Before she returns to New York, where she is residing during her stay in the United States, she hopes to present in the Albions' garden "Prometheus Bound," done in the ancient Greek manner.

In 1927 Mme. Sikelianou and her husband, Angelo Sikelianos, noted Greek poet and philosopher, revived the Delphic Festival, at Delphi Greece. Again in 1930, the festival was presented, under their direction, attracting thousands to the ancient home of culture, both Greeks, and those from other nations interested in seeing the remarkable spectacle.

The festivals, unique as they are in the fidelity to ancient tradition with which they are presented, have a far deeper significance than that of entertainment. Mme. Sikelianou and her husband hope that Delphi, may, as in ancient times, draw together thinkers of all nations who, through their understanding of the arts and sciences, will find the fundamentals which unite mankind and thus point a practical way to peace. While efforts are being made through political channels, at Geneva, to bring unity among nations, they plan that from Delphi shall eminate a cultural force whose influence will be felt throughout the world.

Mme. Siklianou points out that hundreds of years ago, at Delphi, a neutral territory was maintained where nations might bring their treasures to preserve them. Since the modern revival of the festivals, the Greek Government has dedicated a large tract of ground to much the same purpose. It is reserved to be apportioned in gifts to any nations which desire to build on it cultural institutions. The only stipulation with regard to the buildings is that the plans be approved by an international committee of architects.

"My husband believes," said Mme. Sikelianou, "that there are enough of us in the world who understand the common bonds between men and nations, to be a force for peace and international understanding, if only we could know each other and have opportunity to come together. Delphi seems a logical place to establish a center for such contact. It need not be there, however; the Delphic movement is not restricted to any section; it is universal. It is also my husband's idea to found a research center for the study of history approached from the standpoint of the moral and spiritual progress of nations rather than from that of the wars won and lost."

Prepared Three Years for Festival

Mme. Sikelianou worked three years in preparation for the 1927 festival. Her preparation included care for every detail—to make it faithful to the early Greek tradition. It is difficult for the average rushed American who presses a button to order up ready-made food and ready-made frocks, to conceive of the patience and skill of this woman who not only produced the play "Prometheus Bound," which she plans to give here, but also made all of the costumes for principals and chorus—handwoven Grecian robes each in itself a work of art. She learned the weaving from the peasants and did it in her spare time.

If the play is presented in the Albions' garden as is now planned, the 30 girls in the chorus will wear these costumes, woven of heavy silk in all the colors of the sun and sea. They were exhibited last year for several weeks at the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City.

In addition to the costumes, Mme. Sikelianou worked out the music and dances for the chorus from the ancient Greek notation in which the modal music is recorded. This notation, by the way, is adapted to recording all ancient music including that of the Orient, she says. It records intervals which are not on modern instruments and several years ago, in Munich, Germany, she had a pipe organ built on which the modal music could be played.

The men taking part in the festival were of necessity men of strength, for they danced in armor copied from that of the ancient warriors, and carried shields of hand-wrought metal such as those of the early Greeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Albion, who have long been among the prominent patrons of the arts in the Capital, met Mme. Sikelianou through the Greek Minister, Dimitrios Sicilianos, who was in the audience at the first festival at Delphi. He described it as one of the most thrilling spectacles he has ever witnessed.

Translating Works Of Her Husband

Mme. Sikelianou is now engaged in translating her husband's poems and other works into English for publication here. When that is accomplished she will return to Greece. Ten years ago she came to America for a series of lectures, at the invitation of the American Archeological Institute. Two years ago, while in Washington, she was a guest at one of Mrs. Roosevelt's White House press conferences. She is here this time for several weeks and is now working with a group of young girls who will take part in the Greek play some time in September. She has also directed plays at Smith and Bryn Mawr since coming to America this time.

She herself has adopted the costume of the women of early Greece as her customary dress. She weaves all of her robes and makes her Grecian sandals which she wears winter and summer. She is the former Miss Eva Palmer, daughter of Cortland Palmer, of New York.

The National Council of Greek Women acknowledged Mme. Sikellanou's work with a tribute to her, expressing their "unbounded admiration and gratitude for what you with your poet—husband accomplished at Delphi. You brought to life again a sacred tradition—you made an ideal shine. In honoring our country, you taught to other nations what that miracle is which is called Greek civilization. For this, your work, we thank you, Eva Sikellanou, and we call you a great Greek woman."

MISS MARY DEWSON,
who was nominated yesterday by President Roosevelt as a member of the Social Security Board.

Feminist Who Kissed Farley Put on Social Security Board

Miss Mary Dewson, Industrial Economist in the Labor Department, Appointed to Succeed Vincent Miles.

MISS MARY W. DEWSON, an industrial economist in the Labor Department and a worker in the women's division of the Democratic National Committee in the last Presidential election, was nominated yesterday by President Roosevelt as a member of the Social Security Board.

Her renown as a social worker and political leader has been wide. It tipped its peak last winter when she planted a round kiss on the brow of Jim Farley, in the presence of Mrs. Farley, at the testimonial dinner.

If confirmed by the Senate, she will succeed Vincent M. Miles, of Arkansas, whose term has expired. The other board members are John G. Winant, chairman, and Arthur J. Altmeyer.

In the Presidential campaign, and since, her friends affectionately called her "Molly," and have joined her in a team of "Jim and Molly," with Farley on the men's side of the Democratic committee and Miss Dewson the indefatigable worker among the women.

Her career in the public light goes back almost to the days when she was at boarding school and president of the "Cleveland Group" there. That was during Cleveland's campaign and she was then full of the feeling—held since early childhood—that she wanted to work for the Government. "Politics always thrilled me," she says.

Justice Louis B. Brandeis got her the first job. This was with the Women's Educational and Industrial Union, in Boston, in her native State. Her career moved fast. She became secretary of the Parole Department of the State of Massachusetts, with time out to become secretary for the Minimum Wage Commission there.

The suffrage fight engaged her. She rang doorbells in the Massachusetts countryside, urging women to join the crusade. The World War caught her interest; she was zone chief of the Bureau of Refugees for the American Red Cross, in France.

Later, she was president of the New York Consumers' League, but resigned to direct the organizing of women voters for the Democratic Party. She has served in the Labor Department since 1933.

Otherwise, at the moment, she is chairman of the Labor Standards Committee of the National Consumers' League; chairman of the general advisory committee of the women's division of the National Democratic Committee. She has been vice-chairman of the National Committee since 1928.

In recent times, she was a member of the President's Committee on Economic Security, and a member of the Consumers' Advisory Board of the NRA. She is a graduate of Wellesley College and Columbia University.

Recognition came for her labors in the last Presidential campaign. Farley said no individual had contributed more to the results. Representative Mary T. Norton spoke of her as one of the "most practical idealists in politics today." She received a testimonial breakfast at the Willard Hotel on January 21, last, and the congratulations of Mrs. Roosevelt, Farley, and more than a dozen others.

Mrs. Dorothy Harper Elected Head Of District's Legion Auxiliary

MRS. DOROTHY HARPER last night was elected president of the D. C. Department of the American Legion Auxiliary, succeeding Mrs. Mary K. Killeen. The election was held at the final session of the department convention in the Red Cross Chapter House, with an attendance in which all 16 units of the department were represented.

Miss Lillian Reagan headed the ticket in opposition to that on which Mrs. Harper was elected. Mrs. Harper has been active in the auxiliary for 17 years and is a past department president, having served in that office in Hawaii. Mrs. Helen McCabe, first vice president, is the out-going head of Spengler Unit, has served 17 years in the unit and the department, and is Le Demi Capeau of the Eight and Forty. Other vice presidents are Miss Minnie May Hardy, out-going president of the Treasury Unit, and Mrs. Catherine Waters, who for two years served as head of Killeen Unit.

Mrs. Carpenter Is Chaplain

Mrs. Olive Carpenter, of Nash Unit, was elected chaplain; Miss Doris McCane, of James Reese Europe Unit, historian; Mrs. Ethel Clark, of the Treasury Unit, sergeant-at-arms; Mrs. Frances Brown, of Victory Unit, property custodian, and Mrs. Isabel Steinbraker, of Killeen, and Mrs. Helen Ware, of Sergeant Jasper Unit, as color bearers.

The entire meeting last night, after the opening ceremonies and a short talk by Joseph Malloy, national committeeman for the legion, was devoted to the election and installation of officers. The election of department officers was followed by that of delegates to the national convention in New York City, September 20.

Installation ceremonies for both the department officers and those of many of the units whose elections have recently been held, took place after the voting was over.

Several hundred were present to witness the ceremonies which marked the close of the two-day convention.

Mrs. Oscar W. Hahn, of Wayne, Nebr., national president who arrived by plane Tuesday evening to be here for the program that night, left yesterday afternoon for Indianapolis, where she will remain for several days at the national headquarters of the auxiliary. She will return to New York next month to preside at the sessions of the national convention there.

Neutrality Law Application Asked

Peace League President Wires Roosevelt.

Mrs. Hannah Clothier Hull, national president of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, it was disclosed at the national headquarters here, has wired President Roosevelt an appeal "to declare immediately the existence of a de facto war between Japan and China and to apply the neutrality legislation with strict adherence to all of its implications."

The league, an organization of women opposed to all war and all forms of violence, was founded by Jane Addams in the midst of the World War, and aims to unite women on a platform of total, universal and immediate disarmament. It has advocated, in this Congress, the passage of a mandatory neutrality measure.

WHO SAID there was a traffic in Washington? Saw a messenger boy yesterday riding down hill on his bicycle in the midst of motor cars, holding his hat in one hand and a comb in the other, with which he was carefully combing his sleek black hair.

How about a movement for mirrors for messengers in their home offices so they could fix up before leaving with the telegrams? —But never mind, maybe they wouldn't have time to stop before they started. Just skip it.

MISS ALVES LONG, of St. Louis, chairman of the Department of International Relations of the general Federation of Women's Clubs, will be guest of honor and principal speaker at the meeting of the Women's Club of Annapolis and Ann Arundel County on Tuesday, August 31. The meeting will be held at the House of Correction in Jessup with Miss Virginia Addison, of Annapolis presiding.

Miss Long has announced as her topic: "Unto Caesar." Her ardent interest in promoting world peace dates from a year and a half spent abroad in 1922-23. Upon her return to this country, she accepted the chairmanship of international relations in the College Club of St. Louis, and later of the State Federation and the American Association of University Women. She was the originator of the Missouri Peace Book Plan, obtaining more than 38,000 signatures to the statement, "We, the undersigned, say to the United States Government, 'We demand that profit be taken out of war making.'"

Travel Interests Her.

In 1926, Miss Long attended the biennial of the International Federation of University Women in Amsterdam, and later spent some time at the Geneva Institute of International Relations and the League of Nations. Travel is one of her deepest interests. She also finds diversion and inspiration in the theater, and homemaking is one of her hobbies. She and her sister make their home together in St. Louis; Miss Long was educated in a North Carolina private school and at the Universities of Minnesota and Chicago.

She launched a vigorous campaign on behalf of world peace immediately after she had assumed the chairmanship of international relations. Her department is furthering projects designed to interest communities in this subject, to show people their local interests are bound up with those of peoples in the remotest parts of the world. Prizes are awarded for the best projects along this line.

Study Plans Arranged.

Celebrations of Armistice Day, Good Will Day, etc., are also promoted. One of the most intensive study programs ever propounded in the field of world affairs has been put before clubs all over the country; it calls for forums, round tables and panel discussions on the League of Nations, Neutrality, the State Department and various economic subjects such as pressure of population, raw materials and rivalry for markets.

"A more effective and nobler citizenship in the domestic and foreign affairs of our country," Miss Long says, "is the greatest contribution organized women have to make to the public good. They must stand for higher ideals of citizenship and for active participation in the duties of citizenship." She believes that the road to peace lies through educating the people to demand their government pursue policies that will not lead it into war.

Her thorough knowledge of her subject, together with her enthusiasm, make her an outstanding speaker. At the 1935 Triennial Convention of the General Federation, she made an address advocating United States adherence to the World Court which was a brilliant highlight of that gathering. Following her speech, the delegates to the convention voted to reaffirm the federation's indorsement of our adherence to the court. Her writings are also imaginative and lively; she has written three playlets on international relations, "Marriage With Reservations," "The Candidates' Hat Shop" and "Ifs," the 1 st being "a fairy tale of what might happen if clubwomen only had."

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

Well, the tempest about Justice Black was worth the fuss, if only because it evoked Senator Connally's gay and gaudy mussing of the opposition . . . I haven't heard such laughter since I last heard a Jack Benny studio show in Hollywood.

• • • •

Also, besides the Senator who wired home a week after it passed that a certain bill couldn't, there's the Representative who guaranteed passage of a bill four days after it was shelved . . . A lull in Washington life: The stretch of front yards with old-fashioned swings in 'em, on Massachusetts avenue near H street . . .

• • • •

The Indian Chief Aysh-ke-bah-ko-zhay, whose bust stands outside the Senators' gallery, looks as if he belonged in the reform group statue with Frances Willard . . . Representative Otha Wearin, the Lincolnesque young man from Iowa, resembles Buddy Ebsen, my favorite dancer, who ought to play Lincoln in a movie some day.

By leading a coats-off movement the lawmakers could benefit more Americans than with any law they might enact . . . Quite a few officials are in favor of letting their own salaries be taxed . . .

• • • •

Bow-tie addicts: McNary, Lodge, Reynolds and Connally . . . It's as smart for a State to elect a weak member of Congress as it would be to toss away $5,000,000 . . . That's the minimum a go-getter is worth to his State.

• • • •

Yesterday the President used the word "iffy" again in a press conference . . . It belongs in the dictionary . . . Senators Burke and Austin, who explored the metaphysics of the Black appointment, stand nominated to the Society of Ax-Wielding Hair Splitters.

Some of the most loyal members of Congress like to drop an ironic phrase occasionally about an "all-seeing eye" in Washington that can run the States by remote control . . . A tourist phones to complain bitterly that although the trolley stopped in front of his destination, the conductor wouldn't let him off until two blocks farther on.

• • • •

You're a veteran Washingtonian when you have learned how to drive downtown via the Rock Creek park through road . . . There's a lot of digging going on in the White House back yard; maybe they're tunneling for more $35-an-ounce gold.

"—average zoo time, 2½ hours"

Verdict of a foreign diplomat: "Washington is a fascinating town if your work is interesting; it's a devil of a place for a dilletante." If Mr. Farley thought up that "autographed campaign book" dodge, maybe the publishing business should offer him a job as its czar . . .

Which high official has a liquor cabinet built into his car? . . . (If you don't know, I won't tell you, because he's too swell a guy for the prohibition bloodhounds.) . . . Average time of a tourist in the Senate gallery is less than an hour; in the Zoo, about two and a half hours.

. . . During the chit-chat about him Senator Black, of course, was conspicuously absent from the floor of the Senate, but he lunched in the Senate dining room with several colleagues.

• • • •

The "cave dweller" clique of old Washington society is so aloof from Washington life that even a Cabinet member needs a letter of introduction to get acquainted with them . . . You're a mental giant if you can catch one-fifth of the foreign names in the murmured introduction at Washington cocktail parties . . . Some of the opposition Senators are nursing a positive genius for tenanting an untenable position and so getting blisters on their feet.

Lowly Soybean Startles Capital as Exhibit Illustrates Varied Uses

Mr. and Mrs. J. Y. Yee and Alfred Yee, look over the paint ingredients made from soy beans. Yee is a chemist with the Department of Agriculture.

The soybean, chameleon of agriculture, made its formal debut in Washington last night when an exhibit of its wonders, mounted in a Pennsylvania Railroad car, stopped for two hours in Union Station.

That it met with popular approval was evidenced by the continuous flow of visitors which poured through the car during its one-night stand. Except for a group of Department of Agriculture officials, who have known about the soybean all along, the spectators were all amazed to see one little bean pop up under so many different guises. The The agriculture people just stood around and rubbed their hands with satisfaction at the interest aroused by their prodigy.

A series of charts told the visitors the soybean crop has developed from 5,000,000 bushels in 1925 to 37,000,000 in 1935 and about 20,000,000 more this year. And small wonder. For soybeans cost little to produce, can be grown everywhere except on desert wastes and, as last night's exhibit proved, can be used for almost anything.

You can feed them to the pigs or to the baby; wash your face with them—and dry it, for soybean oil is used in soap and in textiles; paint the roof of your house and varnish its floors; cover your kitchen table with soybean oilcloth; spread it on your bread and ice your cakes with it.

Mixed with other meals, soybean flour produces waffles, bread, cake, rolls and cookies which would make your mouth water. Of course, the samples shown last night were under glass and no experimentation with the taste of the edibles was possible. Nevertheless, they looked fine.

Through the courtesy of the American Soybean Association, which is sponsoring the exhibit, visitors were served handsful of roasted salted beans which tasted like a cross between peanuts and almonds. In size and shape they resembled lentils.

Industrially, the soybean has found its niche in plastic products. An automobile horn button and a gear shift head were on display, as was a series of cores used in casting and composed of soybean oil, a soybean protein product and sand. Other commercial uses of the versatile little vegetable were shown in tubes labeled "fly spray" and "orchard oil spray."

A number of meat substitutes, including an enticing "ham" loaf, and a coffee substitute have been developed by one of the more unusual exploiters of the soybean. Madison Agricultural College, a Seventh Day Adventist institution in Madison, Tenn., became interested in the bean nearly 20 years ago when they found it made more palatable the health foods which Seventh Day Adventists advocate.

Pictures of chickens, pigs and cows eating soybean meal pointed out that 90 per cent of the meal produced goes right back on the farm, where it is valued as a protein supplement for livestock. Eighty per cent of the oil from the crop is used in foods.

Farmers in every State have taken to planting more and more soybeans at the suggestion of the Department of Agriculture and State extension services. It is cheap to grow and to harvest, and its very presence improves the soil.

A series of harvest scenes lined the exhibition car to show how harvesting methods have improved during the last few decades. The biggest step forward was the perfection of the combine, the forerunner of which was developed in 1925 by the late Harvey Spaulding Clapp, son of the late Moses Edwin Clapp, of Minnesota.

Clapp grew soybeans on his Virginia estate, which used to be a part of Mount Vernon. According to Russell G. East, general agricultural agent for the Pennsylvania Railroad and director of the exhibit, it was Clapp who conceived the idea of a machine which would beat the beans from the pods as the plants stood in the field. The handy part about this system is that the plants are left standing and gradually turn into hay.

Historically, of course, the soybean is no mere babe in arms. It was imported into the United States in 1804 from China, where natives have grown it for roughly 5,000 years. Orientals use it solely as food. Soybean sauce is familiar to all lovers of Chinese dishes.

But the fact that Asia never really appreciated the bean until now came out yesterday, when a gentleman from Siam called on P. V. Cardon, chief of the Department of Agriculture's division of forage crops and diseases. He had heard about what we were doing with the soybean and wondered if he couldn't start something of the kind in Siam.

Cardon, with Dr. C. W. Warburton, head of the extension service, and Dr. J. J. LeClerc, of the bureau of chemistry, all of whom were present last night, recall the days when the source of the nation's soybean crop was a few packages of seed lying on their desks. Satisfied as they are with the industry's growth, they think the best is yet to come.

"We have made a substantial beginning," Cardon said. "The possibilities are—I won't say infinite, but extensive. Exhibits of this kind are valuable in bringing to the attention of the public the tremendously important place occupied by the soybean in agriculture for raw materials."

Gash on Hand Betrays D. C. 'Pants' Thief

Traced by the wound inflicted by a jagged piece of window pane in his hand, Washington's "pants" burglar was arrested yesterday.

He told police his name was Louis Johnson, alias Willie Simms, colored, 32, of the first block of Patterson street northeast.

Police, who held him last night on an open charge, said he had confessed to seven "jobs," in all of which he stole the trousers of his victims as they slept. After rifling the pockets he threw the trousers away, police said.

Broken Window Clew.

Detective Sergt. R. J. Barrett and Precinct Detectives George Thornton, D. L. Gest and E. E. Scott arrested Johnson at his home yesterday.

Several days ago, they learned, the home of Louis Teivsky, in the 500 block of Sixth street northeast, had been entered as he slept. The burglar stole Teivsky's pants, and jumped through the window, cutting himself and snagging the trousers in the escape. When Teivsky reported the theft to the polic, he said there was a thin line of dried blood leading from his window to the street.

The detectives searched the neighborhood, and finally, near Johnson's home, found the trousers. They then watched for a man with a gashed hand, and arrested Johnson.

Johnson, a former convict, is suspected of several housebreaking jobs in which assaults were committed.

"Mob" Broken, Police Say.

Meanwhile, police early yesterday arrested two additional alleged members of the notorious "Gashouse Gang," and announced that they had corralled the entire "mob."

The two alleged mobsters, said to be confederates of the five youths seized Monday night with the number "13" tatooed on their arms, were taken by members of the automobile squad after a chase which ended near Stanton Park.

The youths are being held with the other five. Seven other former members of the gang are serving sentences for their violations of the law, police said.

Agency Formed By D.C. Dairy to Avoid Va. Rules

Establishment of the Highland Farms Personal Shopping Agency as another means of avoiding the Virginia Milk Commission's price-fixing rules was announced yesterday by Philip Rosenfeld, Highland Farms attorney.

Rosenfeld said that the newly forming shopping agency would operate in nearby Virginia. The agency will obtain milk from the Washington dairy for 9 cents a quart and will sell it to customers for 11 cents a quart. The extra 2 cents will be booked as a service charge.

Although the Virginia Milk Commission has fixed the retail price of milk at 14 cents a quart, the Highland Farms concern is now delivering milk to Virginia customers at 11 cents a quart.

Otto Gaede Dies; Employe of U. S.

Otto H. Gaede, a resident of Washington for 47 years, died yesterday at his home, 735 Otis place northwest, one day short of his 84th birthday.

A native of Baltimore, Mr. Gaede had been employed in the printing office for more than 30 years, until his retirement seven years ago. His wife, the late Mary Tensher Gaede, has been dead for many years.

He leaves two daughters, Miss Anna Gaede, of Washington, and Mrs. Ida Steenson, of Drayton, N. D., and a sister, Mrs. A. M. Wessels of Washington.

Vagrant Star Tore Earth Out of Sun, Scientist Declares

If a wandering star had not passed close to the sun 2,000,000,000 years ago and snatched a chunk of it away, there would be no earth on which to live, Dr. Leason H. Adams of the Carnegie Institution of Washington said yesterday, according to the Associated Press.

That answer to the much debated question of the earth's origin is now the most generally accepted theory, he added.

The attraction of the star passing the sun lifted out a piece of material from the sun's flaming, boiling surface and carried it 90,000,000 to 100,000,000 miles before dropping it in space to cool and become habitable, the Carnegie scientist said.

D. C. Detective Grows Beard To Smash Auto Permit Ring

Disguised as Laborer, Officer Arrests 3 Men as License Racketeers; Fake Cost $8, Duplicate 50 Cents, Police Say.

Disguised as a bearded laborer, Detective Irving Labore yesterday smashed an alleged automobile permit "ring," whose operators are said to have obtained false permits under fictitious names for their clients.

Arrested by Labore, after three days of investigation, were Arthur Leonard Blanks, 25, who gave his address as the 1700 block Eighth street northwest; George R. Stevenson, 28, of the 1300 block New Jersey avenue northwest, and Charles Love, 32, of the same address.

Blanks was arrested first, and, police said, his statements implicated the other two.

Labore grew a beard, donned rough clothing and "hung around," in the first and second precincts.

"I want to get a permit—mine was suspended for driving "drunk," he said.

In this section, police learned, there was a "grapevine" which circulated stories that Blanks could "fix things" for persons who had lost their permits or for various reasons could not obtain them.

According to police, Labore paid Blanks $8 for a fake permit. Police said Labore used marked money in making the purchase, which they alleged was found on Blanks when he was arrested in the shadow of the office of Traffic Director Van Duzer.

When permits were sought, police charged, one of the alleged ring would borrow the permit of some one he knew, then go to the Traffic Bureau and report a permit had been lost and that he wanted a duplicate. When the duplicate was issued, the name was erased and that of the client inserted.

The fee for the duplicate was 50 cents, and for getting a permit $8, Labore said.

Rich Canaries Offered Homes By Many—But They're Dead

Swamped with letters from persons in more than 30 States—all of whom wish to care for the pet canaries mentioned in the will of Mrs. Eleanore E. Witherspoon for which she set up a $1,000 trust fund, officers of the Washington Loan & Trust Co. yesterday gave out the information the canaries were dead—had in fact pre-deceased their mistress.

Most of those writing in offered to care for the birds free of charge. Mrs. Ira Sellers, of Walla Walla, Wash., wrote: "I see in a paper that Mrs. Witherspoon left $1,000 for the keep of her canary birds. I am not after getting the money, but I sure would like to get the birds, as I love birds . . . I have three, but they are not the best, as I never saw my way to pay big amounts for them. I am enclosing a stamp, and remember, I do not have th have the $1,000, as I do not care to have the court watching how I spend it."

From North Carolina came a missive stating, "Have a wonderful climate here. Would give them all home comforts." New Orleans offered "It would be a pleasure to take care of them. I don't care about the money."

One letter from Georgia stated: "Very fond of birds. I had one 18 years and stuffed it when it died."

Little Congress Stymied by 10 Dubious Ballots

Ten questionable ballots in their annual election of officers last night left the Little Congress of the United States virtually leaderless and uncertain just what they would do, if their parent body, Congress, should decide to adjourn before next Tuesday.

Members of the body, secretaries of Representatives and other employes of the House, were certain of only one of their three new officers, Clark Schooley, of Illinois, whom they elected unanimously to the post of clerk of the Little Congress, succeeding Miss Katherine Whittle, of Flordia.

In the other contests, for Speaker and Sergeant at Arms, voting was too close for the elections committee to reach any decision without an investigation of the doubtful ballots. The committee announced that in the race for Speaker Gore Hinzie, Texas, was leading Merrill Daugherty, Illinois, 63-57, while in the other bracket, Merl 'Stevenson, Pennsylvania, with 61 votes was leading Al Griffith, California, with 55.

While the elections committee planned to investigate the ten ballots today, a careful, though not official, verification of three doubtful ballots by members of the Little Congres revealed Hinzie and Stevenson were reasonably certain of election. Announcement of the committee's final decision was scheduled for Tuesday.

While the elections committee examined ballots for more than an hour, members of the Little Congress frolicked through their final business of the year and issued offers of hospitality to their companions for the vacation period.

Speaking under pressure as their chairman, Scott Daniel, Tennessee, kept reducing their time from five minutes to fractions of one minute, the members threw the doors of their native States open to their fellow Little Congressmen.

2-Pound Md. Baby Amazes 3 Doctors By Living 5 Days

Baby Halley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Halley, of Silver Hill, Md., picked Friday the thirteenth to make her entrance into the world three months ahead of schedule. She is spending the first weeks of her life beneath an oxygen tent in a Providence Hospital incubator. Despite this handicap, she is doing as well as could be expected.

Born last Friday at 1:45 a. m., the child weighed less than 2 pounds and could have used one of her father's hands as a cradle. No doctor or nurse was in attendance at the birth, so Halley placed the baby in a cardboard box lined with blankets and took her to the hospital.

U. S. Clerk Found Dead in Bathtub

Miss Mabel Louise Hamilton, 55, of 1616 Sixteenth street northwest, was found dead early yesterday in a bath-tub at her apartment by a friend. She died of natural causes.

The friend, Mrs. Beth M. Ferguson, of the same address, had gone to the woman's apartment after learning that Miss Hamilton had not been to work. Miss. Hamilton was employed as a clerk at the Patent Office.

Funeral services will be held this afternoon at 4:30 at S. H. Hines funeral chapel, Fourteenth and Harvard streets northwest. Burial will be in London.

Col. Peyser Named F.I.D.A.C. Delegate

Col. Julius I. Peyser has been appointed one of the limited official delegates to the next Federation Interallies des Anciens Combattants Congress, to be held in Paris earily in October, the national headquarters of the American Legion announced yesterday.

Closing of Road Is Made Chief Aim at Airport

House Leaders Say They Will Agree to Any Step for Action.

Desiring action at this session of Congress to permit improvement of Washington Airport, House leaders yesterday indicated that they would consent to any compromise which includes a provision authorizing the elimination of Military road.

The War Department has long desired to close the highway. Since Arlington County and the airport have finally reached an agreement for providing a substitute road, there is no longer any opposition.

As a result of the Senate executive session yesterday no action was permitted on the motion made by Senator William H. King, of Utah, to reconsider the Copeland bill for improvement of the air terminal, which has already passed the Senate. Although not opposed to the improvement of the airport, Senator King has declared that he feels the development of an airport at Camp Springs, in line with the recommendations of the commission of which he was chairman should receive priority. He has also indicated that he will prevent Senate action on the Copeland measure until he learns what course the House will follow on the bill providing for development of the Camp Springs terminal.

Representative Dewey Short (Democrat), Missouri, one of the House conferees, declared yesterday that he was ready to agree to a compromise in order to get Military road removed from the middle of the air terminal.

Jobless Vanguard Vainly Asks WPA To Furnish Tents

With an advance guard of a jobless army already in the Capital to demand passage of the Schwellenbach-Allen resolution to "save the WPA," officials of the Workers Alliance of America, sponsoring the march, yesterday appealed to the Government relief heads to furnish Army tents for them.

Six chartered buses brought the advance contingent yesterday—200 men and women mostly from New York and New Jersey. The main body of marchers will not begin pouring into the city until this week-end Lasser said.

Gas Kills Woman; Had Planned Trip

Mrs. Grace H. Merrick, 49, of 1423 Orren street northeast, was found dead in the gas-filled kitchen of her home late yesterday. Police said four gas jets were opened and the windows in the room were closed.

Her body was found by a friend, Joseph W. Elder, of Silver Spring, Md., who said he was almost overcome when he forced the door after there was no answer to his knock. Clad in negligee, Mrs. Merrick was sprawled on the floor.

Police found a letter addressed to a sister, Mrs. Margaret Darling, in Swartwood, N. Y., in which she said she was thinking of joining her in New York. Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald si investigating.

D. C. Fire Toll Cut $192,203 in Year; Total Is $294,204

Losses by fire in the District during the fiscal year ended June 30 decreased by $192,203 over 1936, Chief Engineer Charles E. Schrom reported to the Commissioners yesterday.

The total estimated fire loss during the past year was $294,204—or an average of $77.75 per fire, said Chief Schrom. This figure, he added, is less than one-third of that established by fire-control authorities as very low.

Singing Torch Song of Yesteryear, Judy Garland Scores Mightily in 'Broadway Melody of 1938'

Though But One of a Dozen or More Stellar Performers in Renewal of M-G-M Series, Child Actress Makes Her Bit Stand Out Convincingly; Artists of "Artists and Models" Select Favorite Beauties.

By Gerald G. Gross,
Substituting for Nelson B. Bell.

JUDY GARLAND'S "You Made Me Love You" number in itself will give you your money's worth in "Broadway Melody of 1938."

But for the danger of being introduced to a rolling pin at home, this reviewer would break down and confess that, along about 1 a. m. yesterday, he fell in love with that melodious mite Garland. She was only a shadow and her voice was quite canned, but when she began to give out that famous torch song of a generation ago—wow!

Judy's doleful lament may have been projected across the relatively empty vastness of Loew's Capitol Theater—the occasion was a special midnight screening of the M.-G.-M. super-production which enters the Palace Friday—but her intensely sincere interpretation made that big auditorium seem like a front parlor in which she was singing to nobody but you.

Pouring out her heart over a photographic likeness of Clark Gable, the unwitting cause of her cinematic anguish, she may remind more than one of Libby Holman leaning against the proscenium and "Moanin' Low" in "The Little Show" some eight years ago. That successful revue, it will be recalled, is the one which elevated not only Miss Holman, but also Fred Allen and Clifton Webb to stardom. Like Miss Holman, little Judy is a brunette and has an arresting face. But more to the point, she carries a most powerful torch in that slender throat of hers.

Mistress Garland was excellent in "Pigskin Parade," which gave her her most ambitious screen role prior to "Broadway Melody of 1938," but she really blossoms out in this picture. Oddly enough, her two big song scenes are not truly new. The one, "Everybody Sing," is Nacio Herb Brown's rehash of his own "Singing in the Rain" and "You Made Me Love You, I Didn't Want to Do It" was popular before America entered the World War, if our memory isn't playing tricks. But the way this 4-foot-something fountain of melody puts them over, particularly the torchy one, you may as well forget—and probably will—that you ever heard them before.

Sophie Tucker, herself a very important member of the cast in support of Eleanor Powell and Robert Taylor, also seems to think Judy has the makings.

"I had always hoped to have a daughter of my own who could carry on the tradition that I started in the theater," she said recently, "but this Garland youngster fills the bill.

"Not only has she one of the best voices I've heard, but she understands the value of lyric lines as if she were a grownup. I'm starting to give her extra training right now for I want that Tucker tradition to continue."

Miss Tucker said she had a perfect opportunity to give Judy the benefit of her experience while they were working together as mother and daughter in "Broadway Melody of 1938."

Lest it be inferred that the Garland girl is all there is to "Melody," may we hasten to add that she is but one of the facets—albeit among the brightest—in a musical gem boasting swell dancing, delectable comedy, a score loaded with hit tunes, brilliant photography—but hold! There will be a complete review Saturday morning.

Gail Patrick, Carole Lombard and Kay Francis are the "ideal of feminine pulchritude" and if you don't agree, you may address your boos to Messrs. Peter Arno, McClelland Barclay, Arthur William Brown, Rube Goldberg, John LaGatta and Russel Patterson. Imported by Hollywood to play in "Artists and Models," next feature at the Earle, these six well-known brush-and-pen men arrived at that decision. Each picked the ten actresses he considered the most beautiful in Hollywood. The names of Miss Patrick, Miss Lombard and Miss Francis appeared on four of the six lists. (Warner Stentor Frank LaFalce doesn't mind letting you know that Miss Patrick is in "Artists and Models." Irene Dunne, Marlene Dietrich, Claudette Colbert and Myrna Loy were mentioned three times each. This, opines Senor LaFalce, is somewhat strange: In the first flight, Miss Lombard is the only blonde, while the four runners-up include but one brunette, Miss Colbert. Greta Garbo and Norma Shearer were among the six in the two-vote class, while 18 others made the one-ballot honor roll, including Joan Crawford, Ginger Rogers, Virginia Bruce and Jean Chatburn (whoever she may be).

The Cameo Theater, in Mount Rainier, Md., will undergo a process of renovation within the next few weeks that will make it one of the most modern and comfortable neighborhood houses in suburban Washington, Sidney B. Lust announced yesterday.

The entire front, lobby and foyer will be remodeled to comply with modern streamline designs and a large marquee will be erected. An air-conditioning plant will be installed and the auditorium equipped with new cushioned seats and carpeting. The seats, according to Mr. Lust, will be pitched at a comfortable angle and their plush backs and air-cushion construction will afford perfect relaxation.

Good old Charles Coburn, famous trouper of other days and whose humorous character portrayal in "The Tavern" many years ago is still etched deeply in our mind, is pretty angry because America isn't doing right by its young men and women who wish to be actors and actresses. Organizer and director of the Mohawk Drama Festival at Union College (Schenectady, N. Y.), the stage veteran said last Saturday night that if this country wants home-bred Hamlets, Mercutios and Romeos under the age of 40 or 45, it must see to their training. A crisis has arisen in the legitimate theater, he said, with young stars scarce or nonexistent. "There are only Broadway shows in which a girl or boy of talent may get an opportunity to play one part—if he is lucky—for a few weeks or a season," he said. "Actors, like doctors and other professional people, must have frequent opportunity to practice their art to be proficient."

Lee and Cody O'Neil will be the only brother and sister act in "Going Native," the all-local stage revue opening Friday at Loew's Capitol . . . Lee, 21, won a Charleston contest in their native Wheeling, W. Va., before coming to Washington several years ago . . . he attended Western High here and sister Cody went to Gordon Junior . . . "A Texas Steer," the Roadside Players' next-to-last offering of the season, opens next Monday night . . . and while on the subject of coming attractions, here is a reminder that "Transatlantic Merry-Go-Round" is due at the Rialto Sunday and "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town" at the Little on the same day . . . James Hall, erstwhile film star, is in his second week at the Hamilton's Rainbow Room . . . the Shakespeare craze is gripping Hollywood tighter than ever . . . three of its leading men and one of its better character actors will do "Henry IV" on the Columbia network at 9 p. m. next Monday . . . they are Walter Huston (Henry IV), Brian Aherne (Prince Hal), Humphrey Bogart (Hotspur) and Walter Connolly (Falstaff).

Coming in 'Artists and Models'

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

Hollywood, Aug. 17.—Mutterings: I would like to choke the pests who sit in a theater and make loud-voiced comments on the picture. Secret Ambition: To see a singing star filmed as she really looks while recording an aria—with all the facial contortions left in. Growl: With a figure like that, it is a crime for Claudette Colbert to ban "leg art." Come to think of it, I have seen bigger ears than Clark Gable's—and not on a donkey, either. Imaginable hilarious evening: Listening to ZaSu Pitts and Andy Devine sing grand opera.

ZASU PITTS.

One thing you will never see is a picture costarring Shirley Temple and Jane Withers. Nervous itch: To shave off one side of Adolphe Menjou's too-too-perfect mustache. I should think Hollywood producers would study elementary grammar before trying to make an after-dinner speech. Height of something or other: Victor McLaglen's wail, after getting into a cafe brawl, that men are always trying to pick fights with him because he is so big. Ode to mayhem. To refer to Jeanette MacDonald as the screen's greatest singing star while interviewing Grace Moore.

Gene Raymond has that fetch-me-a-mirror stance. Wondering muse: Why is it that under the make-up almost every star's face reflects disillusionment and fatigue. Somebody ought to remind Ginger Rogers that 3 o'clock appointments should be kept at 3 o'clock—not 4. Frantic urge: To poke a cap pistol in Edward G. Robinson's ribs some dark night and see how tough a screen gangster really is. Wonder why studios that pay $100,000 for a famous novel almost invariably change the title—and the story?

A few days ago, at an "old-timers" party, I saw a picture that was filmed way back in 1914. It starred Fred Stone, then the most famous acrobat in the world, and from opening shot to final fade-out, he performed hair-lifting athletic feats that would have made Douglas Fairbanks, at his best, turn green with envy.

Today, I visited the set where Fred, now in his 60's, is working in a picture entitled "House in the Country." He has been ill for months and is shockingly feeble—so feeble that he moves through even the least trying scenes with noticeable difficulty.

It is normal for men to grow old—but it is not a normal experience to see a man age 23 years in a few days' time. Somehow, I wish I had not seen that ancient picture.

I have been talking with Louise Closser Hale, who has worked with Garbo in a number of pictures and knows the "Sphinx Woman" unusually well. She told me a little story that to my way of thinking has hidden significance. One day, during the production of "Camille," Elizabeth Allan very timidly approached the Great One and haltingly stammered out an invitation for a tennis match. Garbo, as you probably know, is a tennis addict, but she declined the invitation as graciously as she could and then turned to Louise. "I would like to play with her," she said. "But she is so ill-at-ease with me—so nervous and afraid—neither of us would be able to enjoy the game."

Wonder if Garbo is beginning to regret that wall that she has erected to shut out the world. No one can be at ease with a myth.

Director Archie Mayo is the goat of a faux pas that will go down in history. The other day, he was making a scene in which 40-odd extras—all heavily bearded—were working. He was behind schedule, things were not going well, and he was irritable. Suddenly he spied the most glorious beaver in captivity, bobbing up and down outside the set. "Hey, you!" he shouted. "What's the idea of gold-bricking—get in there in front of the camera or get the hell off this set!"

Imagine his embarrassment when a crimson-faced studio executive stepped out of the shadows and introduced the offended beard-owner as the sight-seeing ambassador of a Central European power!

The Roadside

Out there on Rockville pike way the villain last night began his second week of pursuing the heroine in "The Haunted Mill." His diabolic quest, we are assured by the Roadside Players' management, will continue to be futile during this final week of the engagement.

The mustached arch-fiend in this old vintage mellerdrammer by Bernard Francis Moore is ably played by Rudolph Justice Watson. He is admirably foiled by Hero Ralph Patton, abetted by Fred Haskin, allowing Heroine Betty Boyers to dry her tears and her feeble mother to retain the old homestead.

"The Haunted Mill" is, if you ask, a pretty empty piece of writing, but this slight fault is eclipsed by the thorough going-over which the cast of nine gives Mr. Moore's opus.

Night Life.

Bobby Breen, now starring in the musical produced by Principal Productions, "Make a Wish," made his professional debut at 4 years of age in a Toronto, Canada night club. The singing star now is only 10.

Cesar Romero to Support Trevor

Losing no time in casting Cesar Romero in roles worthy of the greatly increased popularity he has acquired from his portrayal of Khoda Khan in "Wee Willie Winkie," Darryl F. Zanuck has assigned him to the featured male lead with Claire Trevor in "The Great Diamond Robbery."

This will mark Romero's first screen appearance since he was placed under long-term contract by 20th Century-Fox following his performance in the Shirley Temple picture.

Horse Race Epic Bought for Jane

"Checkers," one of the biggest money-making racetrack plays of stage history, has been purchased by Twentieth Century-Fox and will be produced in early fall with Jane Withers in the starring title role.

Although Jane will first make "45 Fathers," she is taking daily riding lessons in order that she may do justice to the part of the jockey in "Checkers."

British Tea Habit Invades Filmdom

Every afternoon at 3:30 o'clock throughout the filming of "Wife, Doctor and Nurse" at Twentieth Century-Fox, Director Walter Lang, Loretta Young, Warner Baxter, Virginia Bruce and other members of the cast had tea on the set with technicians in the company. The water was heated in an old white enamel teakettle over an electric hot plate. Loretta always provided the tea biscuits.

Mrs. Stone Fears Fred'sGetting Lazy

She watched the shooting of several scenes in each of which her husband lolled in the shade, stretched on the grass or napped beneath the trees. After two hours of this, she returned to her car.

"I'll never be able to get him to do anything around the house for me, after all this," she told Director Rosson sadly.

Young Player Is Soon to Star

Phyllis Brooks, a blue-eyed blonde who is regarded as one of the best stardom prospects on the Twentieth Century-Fox lot, has been awarded the leading feminine role in "The Great Diamond Robbery," opposite Cesar Romero. Miss Brooks takes the place left vacant by Claire Trevor, who is confined to her home with a heavy cold.

Phyllis Brooks is a Boise, Idaho, girl who was first attracted to film scouts as the result of her picture in a tooth paste advertisement. Her work in "Stage Door," on Broadway, brought her the test that resulted in her present contract.

Gehringer Threatens Travis' Bat Lead

By Shirley Povich.

New York, Aug. 17.

A new and immensely popular threat in what for weeks has been a three-man race for the American League batting championship is Charles Gehringer, the strong, silent fellow of the Detroit Tigers' infield. Virtually unnoticed by all except the guys who have had to pitch to him of late, Gehringer has moved into the No. 2 spot among the leading hitters.

POVICH.

This morning he was showing a .373 average that placed him second to league leading Cecil Travis. Up past Joe DiMaggio and Lou Gehrig Gehringer has moved during the past week, to stamp himself as a genuine contender for that 500 bucks the league gives the fellow who shows the highest batting average at the finish.

The presence of Gehringer among the top four cannot be discounted as a mere flash in the pan. The fact is that Gehringer and Lou Gehrig are the only two truly solid men in the batting race. Travis and DiMaggio are the fellows who may be offering the hollow threats. Neither of this pair, until this season, ever came close to the batting title.

* * * *

If any of the four leaders are batting over their heads, it would appear that Travis and DiMaggio are the guys. With all due respect to the Washington shortstop, who is doubtless a natural hitter and has not compiled the league leading average of his with the help of lenient scorers, it must be observed that Travis never hit more than .319 in his life. And DiMaggio in his one previous season hit only .329, 50-odd points under his current mark.

* * * *

But Gehringer crashed into the top five during all of the past three campaigns. He hit .356 in 1934, .330 in 1935 and .354 in '36. That is consistency on a higher level than either DiMaggio or Travis can show. And Gehringer can dig up three other seasons that show him batting .330 or better. He has a lifetime average of .325.

* * * *

Past performances still favor Gehrig to beat off the other challengers and win the hitting championship. Lou is the only guy in the group of leaders who ever did it before and twice he has hit .370 or better. Four times he finished with marks above .360.

* * * *

But, outside of Washington and New York, the native bailiwicks of Travis, DiMaggio and Gehrig, the triumph of Gehringer in the batting race would be better received and more happily acclaimed than a similar conquest by any other player. Because Gehringer for a dozen years has been treating fans around the circuit to the absolute best show of consistently brilliant baseball the league has seen in Gehringer's era.

* * * *

His sheer brilliance has tended, paradoxically, to make his play unspectacular. The cat-like manner in which he moves around the infield, reducing vicious smashes to easy chances, and playing the hitters with such canny judgment that he has few difficult plays, has served to mask his true capabilities.

* * * *

But Gehringer's mastery of the second base position, his dependable hitting, is no secret among the ball players in the American League. Pop the question to any of 'em. Ask 'em point blank who is the best ball player in the American League, position for position, man for man, and the answer will be, without hesitation, a loud ringing—"Gehringer."

* * * *

* * * *

Gehringer has been that kind of a ball player ever since Oscar Veach, scouting him for the Tigers in 1924, picked him up off the lots at Fowlerville, Mich. He was a kid of 21 then. But not until this 1937 campaign which finds him, at 34, in the sunset of his career, has he made such a bold bid to lead all the league's hitters. Somehow, you'd like to see him do it.

By the Associated Press.

Shawnee-on-Delaware, Pa., Aug. 17. — Helen Detweiler, Maryland State champion set a new record for the Shawnee Country Club course, a 75, 2 under women's par in defeating Eliza Todd, veteran campaigner from Philadelphia, 8 and 6, in the first round of the women's invitation here today, scene of the 1938 national P. Sports in Brief

GRID SEASON SET.

Richmond, Va., Aug. 17.—The University of Richmond and Apprentice School will launch the Old Dominion's new football season the night of September 17 at Newport News.

The game will be the first of 76 listed for Virginia college teams this fall.

NAVY GRIDDERS WORK.

BUDGE'S TENNIS RUSTY.

Newport, R. I.—Don Budge's post-Davis Cup vacation from singles competition appeared to have rusted his brilliant brand of tennis today when he made his belated start in the historic Newport Casino tournament, which he won two years ago.

The lanky red-haired Californian, considered the greatest amateur player in the world, managed to advance through two unseeded rivals, but in such unimpressive fashion that it was obvious he needed several exacting tests to prime his game for his title defense at Forest Hills next month.

* * * *

SEEDED STARS WIN.

Manchester, Mass.—Outsiders failed again yesterday to dent the seeded list in the Essex Country Club's Women's Invitation Tournament as the two top-seeded Boston stars, Miss Kay Winthrop and Mrs. Virginia Rice Johnson, swept into the quarter-finals seeking the title undefended by Miss Alice Marble, national champion.

Miss Winthrop downed Mrs. Carleton Mabley, Jr., of Brookline, 7—5, 6—3, while Mrs. Johnson overcame Miss Jane Stanton, of Los Angeles, 6—4, 6—2, reversing the result of their clash last week at Rye, N. Y.

SEEDED PLAYERS WIN.

Pittsburgh.—Lanky Lewis Wetherell and stately Elizabeth Deike, California's defending champions in the men's and women's singles, led the seeded players in a solid front through the second day's firing in the National Public Parks Tennis championships yesterday.

Wetherell, who had a bye into the second round, galloped past Al Joseph, of Chicago, with the loss of only seven games in three sets, 6—3, 6—2, 6—2.

LEADS LEFTY GOLFERS.

Pirates Defeat Cubs; Dodgers Bow to Phils

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, Aug. 17.—Fine pitching in the pinches by Lefty Brandt and a brilliant ninth inning catch by Lloyd Waner helped the Pittsburgh Pirates beat Chicago, 4 to 2, today.

It was the fourth straight victory for the Pirates and coupled with New York's triumph over Boston, reduced the Cubs' leadership over the challenging Giants to three games.

Waner's catch of Herman's whistling liner which appeared to be good for two bases ended the game. Two runners on the bases were headed toward the home base.

Brandt entered the game limping with an injured leg, but held the slugging Cubs to one run until he was forced to retire in the eighth after Galan doubled.

The breaks gave the Pirates their two-run winning margin in the seventh. Handley's liner glanced off Hack's glove and before Jurges recovered the ball the speedy Pirate was on second. Brandt's grounder bounced off French's glove and went for a scratch single. Lloyd Waner then singled, scoring Handley and sending Brandt to third, from where he tallied after Dickshot's long fly.

Paul Waner made four singles in four times at bat, running his string to seven straight safeties and a base on balls for his last eight trips to the plate.

Bosox Take 12th in Row From A's, 6-1

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, Aug. 17.—The Boston Red Sox had little trouble taking the first joust of a three-game series with the Athletics today, supporting Jack Wilson's 8-hit pitching with a 14-hit assault to win by a score of 6 runs to 1.

Two runs in the first inning, to which they added four in the second stanza, put the game on ice for the Cronin men. The victory was Boston's twelfth over the Mackmen in as many games this year.

The Athletics were piloted today by Earl Mack, son of Connie Mack, the club's veteran manager and president, who was ill. The elder Mack expected to rejoin the team tomorrow.

Coffey Nine, O'Donnell's Battle Today for Flag

Separated by half a game, Coffey Screen Co., Industrial League pacesetters, and O'Donnell's Sea Grill, first half champions, collide at 5 p. m. today on the North Ellipse in the tilt likely to decide the second-half champion.

Gomez Yields 3 Hits, All Singles, in First

Slender Southpaw Insists on Pitching Despite Death of His Mother; Turns in Masterful Game; New Yorkers Take Nightcap by Rally.

(A gripping story on Lefty Gomez, written by George Kirksey, appears on Page 19.)

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

New York, Aug. 17.—Colder than an Eskimo's nose, Washington's eight-game winning streak was stopped in a strange tableau of grief heaped on grief here in Yankee Stadium today.

Wet-eyed and heavy of heart after receiving the news of the death of his mother at the family homestead in Rodeo, Calif., Vernon (Lefty) Gomez strode to the pitching mound a half-hour later because "she would want me to," and pitched the Yankees to a stirring victory.

While 25,898 unknowing fans howled and clapped their plaudits heavy-hearted left-hander, Gomez, into the unreceptive ears of the in his grief, produced a pitching classic—a three-hit, 8-0 shutout triumph over the Nats.

Thus did Washington's winning streak come to an end, but for the Nats there was no surcease from sorrow. In the second game of the double-header, the unfeeling Yanks, not satisfied with ruining the longest succession of victories achieved by a Washington team since 1933, brutally snatched another game away from the Nats, 6 to 4.

The second game was, for the Nats, no less than torturous. They were beaten all the way by Gomez in theopener, but they were blackjacked by the Yankees in the late innings of that after performance when Jimmy DeShong had a 3-1 lead as late as the eighth inning.

Then the Yanks produced six hits and five runs and tumbled the Washington club out of the fifth-place position which it held this morning.

Down in the Yankee dressing room before the start of hostilities, his teammates found a brave young Gomez fighting off a complete breakdown at the news of tragedy at home. He had made a flying trip to the Coast ten days ago to visit his aged mother, then lying ill, and had expected her recovery.

Wanted to Pitch.

Manager Joe McCarthy, with a paternal arm around the shoulder of his slim southpaw ace, attempted to console Gomez, told him to forego today's pitching assignment. Between sobs, the left-hander thanked the Yankees' manager, said he guessed he'd rather pitch today than do anything else.

"She'd want me to, Joe," said Gomez simply.

And what a ball game he pitched! Buddy Lewis and Cecil Travis rapped a pair of futile singles to right and center in the third inning, and in the fourth Al Simmons singled to right. That was the last hit the Nats made off Gomez. Lewis was the only Washington athlete to reach third base. Only one other got as far as second. In those last five innings, the grief-stricken Gomez was invincible.

The ball game began in a very deceiving manner. Pete Appleton did no less than strike out the first four Yankees to face him—Crosetti, Rolfe, DiMaggio and Gehrig. All but Crosetti swung at the fatal third strike. And Appleton was off to the most auspicious start of his big-league career, with hostile Yankee fans already applauding his feat.

And then, all of a sudden, the Yanks began to solve Appleton's curve. Bill Dickey walloped a home run into the rightfield bleachers in the second inning, Tony Lazzeri lined a homer to left a bit later and by the end of the inning the Yanks had a 2-0 lead.

Appleton's collapse was complete in the third inning. Before young Ken Chase could get the side out for him, the Yankees had produced six more hits and five runs. Gomez himself singled, and Rolfe and DiMaggio followed with singles. Lou Gehrig contributed a double, Bill Dickey drew a walk, and Hoag drove in the fifth run of the inning with a single to center. That upped the Yankees' lead to 7-0 and brought young Ken Chase into the game.

The lone balm for the Nats was Chase's pitching during the last five and a third innings. The only Yankee hit he yielded was a freak pop bunt by Gomez that contributed to the Yanks' last run in the eighth. It was an impressive performance that presages more frequent work for Chase.

The Yankees' victory in that second game was an awful jolt to the Nats and DeShong. And it was an awful jolt that won the ball game—Bill Dickey's second home run of the day that found Lou Gehrig on base and broke a 3-3 tie in the eighth inning.

Nats Get Early Lead.

Against their old pal, Bump Hadley, the Nats picked up a run in each of the first three innings. Buddy Lewis singled in the first, stole second on Hadley's windup and was scored by Johnny Stone's single. Rick Ferrell walked in the second, went to second on DeShong's single to center, to third, when Almada walked to fill the bases and scored, when Crosetti booted Lewis' bounder. Two walks and two errors by Crosetti produced their third and last run—in the third.

All of this time, the Yanks were making only one run, the tally that evolved in the first in

Locals Keep Pace With New York

Today's Printer Schedule.

New York vs. Cincinnati—Griffith Stadium.

Twin Cities vs. Washington—South Ellipse.

Detroit vs. Chicago—West Ellipse.

St. Louis drew the bye.

Indianapolis and Pittsburgh were eliminated yesterday.

Washington and New York were tied for first place as a result of second-round games in the International Union Printer Baseball Tournament yesterday as the field was reduced to nine teams when Pittsburgh and Indianapolis suffered their second straight losses.

The locals turned in another one-sided victory trouncing Detroit, 13-4, while the New Yorkers kept pace, nosing out Baltimore, 5-4. In other games, Cincinnati, idle Monday, made a successful debut plastering St. Louis, 12-3; Boston swamped Pittsburgh, 21-5, and Chicago rebounded from a forfeit loss for use of an ineligible player Monday by blasting Indianapolis, 20-12.

Carl Bean was the hero of the Washington success, holding the hard-hitting Motor City boys to eight well-spaced blow- fanning three, while kicking in with three singles to pace the club at bat. Harry Hofberg, with two singles and a triple, and Phil Boundford, with a trio of singles, also contributed heavily to the 15-hit offensive. Hofberg sparkled in the field at second base.

Bean worked easily behind an early 6-0 lead accumulated in the first two innings and blanked the enemy until he eased up and permitted a run in the fifth. The outcome was never in doubt.

New York found Baltimore not quite as tough as did Pittsburgh, which bowed, 28-2, in the opener, but had to come up with a pair of tallies in the ninth inning to emerge on top. Baltimore outhit the winners, 17-14, but Cinney, New York pitcher, was tough to solve in the pinches. Darchmont, Lucato and Lelehuck paced the winning attack.

Cincinnati unveiled a very strong nine against St. Louis. Goeitke and Stieringer combined to pitch the best game of the tournament, allowing but five hits, and Leftfielder Huelsebuch smashed two prodigious homers to help the winners along. Steger and Brun homered for St. Louis.

Pittsburgh's pathetic entry was no match for Boston and the game was called after the losers had batted in the first half of the sixth. Boston pounded 18 hits, which combined with ten Pittsburgh errors, proved sufficient to administer another overwhelming defeat to the helpless Smoky City boys.

Pittsburgh scored all its runs in the fourth inning as bats went completely around marking the third time that had happened so far. For Boston sent more than nine men to bat in both the first and second innings.

Chicago, though outhit, 19 to 13, made hits count in trimming the hapless Indianapolis team. Bredel, of the losers, salvaged a little honor for the losers with four hits in five trips to capture individual batting honors.

Charles Ficco Paces Printers Golf Event.

Charles Ficco, a local compositor, shot a 79 at Indian Spring yesterday, coupled it with his first day's score of 81 and was medalist with a 160 total in the local Union Printers golf tourney, held in conjunction with the baseball tournament now in progress here.

Eighteen holes are carded today and tomorrow with the 28 players divided into A, B and C handicap classes and trophies awarded to the gross winners in each class.

W. T. Henderson trailed the leader by seven strokes with 85—82, 167, while Fred Striner, of Washington, and Matty Mathews, Miami, Fla., were tied for third low medal honors at 168, a stroke behind Henderson. Mathews played 36 holes yesterday scoring 88 and 80 while Stringer added an 81 to a previous 87.

Abner Ludwig, Detroit, gave the out-of-town participants two places in the five leaders by scoring an 84 to his Monday's 87 for 171. J. J. McCarthy, Boston, and Andy Anderson, Baltimore, were next among the visiting players with 193, totals, while Bill Hebner, of Baltimore, was '97.

WISE DUKE moved up fast on the outside in the run down the backstretch, gained a brief lead when rounding the far turn, lost command to IDLE WAY, continued to hold a position on the outside, and responding gamely to urging, wore down the leader nearing the close to increase lead in the closing strides. IDLE WAY, under slight reserve early, moved up fast when called upon, and taking the lead, fought it out with good energy. VICTORIOUS ANN, prominent from the start, dropped back midway of the turn and finishing willingly, was no match for the leading pair.

SORCERESS, unable to keep pace early, in the last 70 yards, BAY BUBBLE took command and once, opened up a good lead, and moved up on the inside after rounding the far turn, and although placed under pressure, was unable to make up any ground.

Favorites Fare Well in Juvenile Net Play

Junior Play Still Paced By Johnsen

Wadden, McNair Boys' Finalists; Girls in Semifinals.

By Bob Garrison.

Only one favorite, Margaret Duffy, who was listed No. 2 in the girl's play, was eliminated. She bowed out in the quarter-finals match when she was upset by Jimmy Bishopp, playground tournament finalist, 6—1, 6—1.

Meanwhile, Davie Johnsen, seeded No. 1 in the junior tournament, advanced into the semifinal round by defeating Jack Hoyt, after a lengthy first set, 11—9, 6—1. After Hoyt had forced the ranking Junior Davis Cup squad members to fight for every point in the first set, he gave way in the final set as Johnson overpowered him.

Doyal Royal, whom Davie meets this morning in the semifinals, gained that round by trouncing Bernie Blankin, 6—2, 6—1. Harry March advanced from the third round by eliminating Ted Tansey, 6—0, 6—3.

The entry Johnsen is expected to meet in the finals, Marvin Carlock, Western States champion, won his third-round match from Eddie Smith, 6—1, 6—0, and now faces his stiffest test of the tournament when he meets clever Harry March today for the right to play Billy Turner in the semifinals.

In the Boys Tourney, Freddie McNair, Maryland State champion, seeded No. 1, defeated Harold Titus, 6—6, 6—4, to gain the final round where he will meet Tom Wadden, Western High School captain, who eliminated Maurice Cowan, in three sets, 4—6, 6—3, 6—4. They play tomorrow when final events in all three tournaments will be held.

While Margaret Duffy was being ousted, Doris Decker, No. 1 seeded player, was moving into the semi-final round with Margo Mink and Harriette Williams. Miss Decker defeated Dorothy Barclay, 6—0, 6—2, while Miss Mink eliminated Molly Thompson, playground champion, 3—6, 7—5, 7—5.

In today's semifinal matches, Miss Decker meets Miss Mink and Miss Bishopp opposes Miss Williams.

Yanks Take Two, End Nats' Streak

tying run on a horribly tainted single by Lou Gehrig—a meek bounder toward Buddy Myer that took a weird hop into rightfield as Myer was set for the catch that would have made the second out. Then along came Dickey with that home run of his, and the Yanks were in front, 5-3; Henrich tripled to center, and before Syd Cohen came in to get the side out, Hoag followed with a single to center that made it 6-3.

Washington threw a scare into Hadley and the Yanks in the ninth when the Nats came up with a run and had the tying tally on second base with none out, but Johnny Murphy, leader of the Yankees' rescue squad, came in and extinguished the conflagration.

Hadley walked Lewis and Travis to start that ninth inning and then walked himself—to the showers. Murphy pitched a freakish double to Johnny Stone that settled in short leftfield and bounced into the boxes for a ground rule two-bagger. Lewis scored on the blow, and Travis went to third, and then the Nats went into eclipse.

Joe Kuhel could deliver only a meek pop-up to Lou Gehrig. Buddy Myer's fly to DiMaggio was so tame Travis didn't dare to score after the catch, and Freddie Sington provided the final out with a fly to DiMaggio so weakly hit that Second Baseman Heffner could have caught the ball if Der Mag hadn't scared him off.

A No-Hitter.

Rebel Garrison pitched a six-inning, no-hit, no-run game yesterday as Naval Air blanked Treasury, 7-0, in a U. S. Government League game which was abbreviated by darkness.

Lefty Gomez, Told of Mother's Death, Hurls Yankees to Victory, Then Cries Heart Out

By George Kirksey,
United Press Staff Writer.

New York, Aug. 17.—Lefty Gomez, wearing nothing but a dirty sweat shirt, sat in the New York Yankees' dressing room just before dusk today, and the tears trickled down his chin and went drip-drip to the floor.

His mother had died—a continent away in California. It was Gomez's turn to pitch. So the Yankees' star southpaw—tears sometimes blurring the batters for him—went out and pitched one of the greatest games of his great career. He beat the Washington Senators, 8 to 0. He gave them only three hits. He got two singles out of four times at bat. Then he took a long, slow walk to the clubhouse, sat down on a stool and wept his heart out.

Outside the shouts of 25,898 fans—most of whom did not know about the burden of sorrow that Gomez carried into the game—still rang through Yankee Stadium. Ordinarily, the Yankee clubhouse would have been a bedlam, too, for Lefty's great pitching had enabled them to break a three-game losing streak.

But today there was silence.

Gomez stripped down to a dirty sweat shirt dripping with perspiration, sat on the second stool from the left, with his legs crossed, smoking a cigarette. Tears streamed down his cheeks.

eating ice cream. All down the line the Yankee players were silent. Across the room Lou Gehrig spoke in whispers. Here and there a player moved about noiselessly. The conversation was muffled.

Inside his little cubicle of an office, Manager Joe McCarthy said:

"I left it up to Lefty. I told him he could make his own choice. You know he chose to pitch. I don't know what his plans are. He can go home if he wishes, but I understand his mother told him when he visited her last week not to leave the team any more to come see her. But it's up to him."

A reporter put his arm around Lefty's neck and whispered words of sympathy to him. Lefty just shook his head in the affirmative, and stared at the floor.

When the Yanks went back to play the Senators in the second game of the double-header, Gomez stayed behind in the locker room. He took a shower, dressed slowly and left the park. Asked about his plans, he said;

"I don't know."

Gomez made a flying trip to his mother in Rodeo, Calif., last week, leaving the Yanks for several days. She showed improvement and he rejoined the team in Philadelphia last Friday, going to the mound an hour after his plane landed. He tired in the late innings and lost, 4-3. Gomez's father died during the winter of 1936.

Today McCarthy went to Gomez ten minutes before game time and said:

"I'd rather pitch," Gomez said. "Then I won't have so much time to think."

"Okay—and good luck," McCarthy said.

California Caster Leads in Tourney

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 17 (AP).—A gentle breeze at his back, Richard G. Miller, of Huntington Beach, Calif., flung a fish line and barbless hook 183 feet today to lead a field of 33 entrants in the national distance fly casting championship.

Miller's longest heave landed 13 feet beyond his closest competitor, Ed Liotta, jr., Cleveland fly tosser. In third place came Jack McFish Sparks, a Waco, Tex., sports writer, who reached an average of 158½ feet in five minutes of casting.

WalterPodolok To Supplement Wrestle Show

Walter Podolok, the handsome physical education instructor, who has grappled with great success on the Pacific Coast is numbered among the wrestlers appearing in support of the Ernie Dusek-Abie Coleman match tomorrow night at Griffith Stadium. He has been matched with Bobby Roberts, former Dayton College athlete.

Podolok, who boasts one of the manliest physiques in wrestledom, appeared at the stadium a few weeks ago, and made quite a hit.

Also closed yesterday by Promoter Turner were 30-minute bouts between Thor Johnson, the Western giant, and Jim Wright, and Bill Sledge and Mayes McLain, two one-time college football stars.

The semiwindup will bring together two old rivals in Kansas Joe Cox and Stanley Pinton, the Bohemian Bomber.

Dusek and the comical Coleman are wrestling here for the first time in more than two years. Their last bout at the old Auditorium went two hours to a draw, and is believed to be one of the roughest on record.

Chevy Chase Captures Midget Championship

Shorty Alexandria yesterday pitched the Chevy Chase Cardinals to the midget division championship of the Columbian League holding George Deoudes to two hits and fanning 16 batters while winning 7-3. Weinstein led the assault with a triple and a single.

Kahn, Chicago, Guard, Sought By Redskins

Washington's newly acquired Redskin gridmen last night began the tedious task of attempting to regain a traded player without putting themselves in the light of Indiangivers. Said player is Eddie Kahn, a guard, who was shipped to the Chicago Bears last winter in exchange for Ed Michaels.

Coach Ray Flaherty needs guards badly, and through General Manager Jack Espey has made the Bears a substantial cash offer for Kahn's return. The latter is an alumnus of North Carolina State College, graduating two years ago.

The situation has been aggravated by decisions of Larry Siemering and Steve Sinco to remain in California. The former has a coaching position and Sinco is engaged in a lucrative business. Flaherty was counting on both to bolster his line.

Meanwhile Espey is trying to land Jack LaBay, West Virginia Wesleyan quarterback last year, who has leanings toward the pro game but is balking at the terms offered. LaBay, a 200-pound, 6 foot 1 inch individual, was outstanding in the Bobcats' 24-19 victory over Catholic University last season.

Tigers Beat White Sox in Batting Bee

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Aug. 17.—Detroit's Tigers added a full game to their margin over Chicago in the battle for second place in the American League today by winning a slugging match from the White Sox, 11 to 7, in the series opener.

The Tigers belted Johnny Whitehead out of action before he could retire a man and had six runs before John Rigney could get the situation under control.

The victors' 14-hit attack included home runs by Rudy York, who also had a triple and two singles; Pete Fox and Charley Gehringer. Dixie Walker hit one for the White Sox in the third during a five-run uprising that drove Roxie Lawson, the Tigers' starting pitcher, from the mound.

Giants Whip Boston, 4-1; Gain in Race

Boston, Aug. 17.—Behind five-hit, five strike-out pitching by Cliff Melton, their lanky southpaw, the New York Giants today climbed within three games of the National League lead by outscoring the Bees, 4 to 1.

Melton, walking only one man, drove in one of his team's runs with a long fly in the second, when the Giants scored three times on four hits off veteran Guy Bush. Bush gave way to Ira Hutchinson in the ninth and was charged with the defeat, his fifteenth of the year.

Cook Confesses Trunk Murder Of Dope Addict

Hiding Place for Nude Body Provided Clew; Death Gun Found.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Aug. 17.—Detective Capt. Edward Mullins announced tonight a man booked as Joseph Ogden, 36-year-old unemployed cook and dishwasher, has confessed the slaying of Oliver George Sinecal, petty criminal and drug addict, whose nude body was found in a trunk delivered to an express agency this afternoon.

Detectives said they traced the trunk to a dealer who said he sold it yesterday.

Occupants of buildings near the trunk store said they saw a man waiting 20 minutes for it to open early yesterday.

The principal clew, detectives said, was a number on the trunk.

With it they began a canvass of luggage concerns in the city. They then went to the West Side address to which the trunk was delivered and arrested Ogden.

Police said they found two pistols in Ogden's room, one a .32-caliber revolver from which one shell had been fired.

When discovered through blood trickling from the trunk, Sinecal's body had a .32-caliber slug in the head.

Police said this weapon killed Sinecal, who had a petty police record in several cities.

After first protesting his innocence, Ogden broke down, police said, and confessed he shot Sinecal in a struggle for possession of the revolver. Detectives said neighbors told them Ogden and Sinecal had been living together about three months. Ogden told police he and Sinecal had quarreled twice in the last two weeks and that Sinecal had beaten him.

Wheat Climbs As War Rages In the Orient

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Aug. 17.—Extreme bulges of 3¼ cents a bushel in Chicago wheat prices today accompanied disquieting crop reports from the Southern Hemisphere, coupled with oriental war developments.

Both from Argentina and Australia came word that wheat crop prospects were being sharply reduced by drought, and suggestions were numerous that North America may be called upon to furnish breadstuff supplies to Japan and China alike. One report current was that Japan had commandeered 6,000,000 bushels of wheat. Profit-taking sales on wheat market upturns, however, led to late reactions from the day's top price level.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were 1 cent to 2¼ above yesterday's finish; September, 1.12@1.12⅝; December, 1.13⅛@1.14; May, 1.15⅛@1.16. Corn unchanged to ⅞ lower; September, 98¾@99; December, 67⅝@67¾; May, 69. Oats ⅛ to ½ up; December, 29⅝, with rye varying from ¼ decline to ½ advance; December, 79. The provisions outcome was 7 to 25 cents drop.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively
A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Move Irregularly Lower in Dull Trading; Bonds Yield; Wheat Advances.

New York, Aug. 17.— Stocks backed and filled and closed with small losses in the majority, outside the steel group and some specialties. Government bonds were a shade easier. Wheat climbed but other commodities were uncertain. September wheat rose 1⅛ cents to $1.25⅝ a bushel. Turnover in stocks was around 650,000 shares.

The fight in Congress over confirmation of Senator Black for the Supreme Court and the scrapping of much of the "must" legislation of the New Deal, for this session at least, as a consequence, left the markets untroubled. More interest was taken in the Chinese-Japanese war, which is going to mean a serious setback to reviving world trade, although on short view a fillip may be given to some industries here, and particularly to shipping.

Round-About Trade.

Assuming a neutrality proclamation which would bar American ships from hauling goods to China (paid for with the recent huge credits granted), the practical effect would be merely to shift the available tonnage. British ships, for example, would do the carrying from Pacific ports to China and American ships now engaged in the Pacific would come round to the Atlantic. In the same way industries making other than munitions may receive larger orders, probably from both Japan and China as the fighting progresses. We can't sell munitions, but we can sell plenty of iron, steel, copper and cotton.

In the end the loss of peace-time trade will offset the temporary gains from war supplies, and the complete debacle of both Japanese and Chinese currencies is probable, bringing further reduction of our export trade. Meanwhile, the Chinese have made an arrangement with a gun factory in Czechoslovakia whereby the American gold recently given them for their silver can be converted somehow into guns and bullets.

Forward Buying.

The slight lull in business during the dog days is giving the economists an opportunity to point out certain defects now clearly visible which may cause trouble later. Up to a few months ago the rapid expansion of installment selling was given full credit everywhere for much of the rise in trade activity. It was an anticipation as much as actual receipt of higher wages. More recently some doubts have been expressed, first by the banks and later by the heads of the leading motor finance companies, as to the wisdom of letting the practice go on at the present pace.

The head of one of the principal automobile installment purchase finance companies a few days ago said he believed the time of payments should be shortened and perhaps the down payment increased. Today the head of the National Automobile Dealers Association urged that the finance companies curtail capital loans to motor car dealers. "A crucial point has been reached in the general practice by dealers and finance companies of granting long-term financing," he said, and suggested that the brake be put on while the braking was good, to avoid trouble when the next depression strikes.

Credit Caution.

A resolution adopted by the association perhaps goes further than it needs to and some of the finance companies might take exceptions. The dealers' point of view is nevertheless entitled to its day. In part the resolution said: "Among the most damaging influences in recent years to the automobile industry's retailing structure has been the inflation of credit by the finance companies." True or not, the American penchant for installment purchases is real and when carried too far is as likely to exaggerate the prosperity periods as it is to complicate the problems of recovery from the depressions that follow the booms.

Stocks all along the line were soft in the early dealings and trading soon dwindled to such small measure that price changes meant little. Around the noon hour some improvement began, aided by a rise in wheat and mere fatigue with the weakness of the past day or two. Steel, which had dropped 1½ points at the start, recovered to about the previous day's closing level. Numerous standard industrial shares moved in similar fashion

Banking Position.

Commercial banks report for last week another rise in business loans. The increase was $49,000,000 for banks in leading cities, of which New York accounted for $18,000,000 Loans to brokers and banks contracted and reserves rose. Banks here sold $57,000,000 of Government securities last week, but the decrease for all reporting banks was only $33,000,000. Chicago and Cleveland banks bought $24,000,000. Changes in deposits were small.

Consolidation.

There are some who believe that Messrs. Young, Kirby and Kolbe started unraveling the wrong end of the Midamerica tangle, holding forth that the consolidation of the railroad properties should have been attempted first. That would have given the I. C. C. something to ponder over for some months or years. The application for exercising C. & O.'s option requested permission to acquire the Nickel Plate and Erie stock on February 1, 1938. With that much leeway it would be over-optimistic to expect the commission to hasten its decision. From present indications, it seems that the present merger plan will be still in the argumentative stage on February 1, 1938, so the consolidation method may yet be the first constructive move.

Soaking the Rich.

Favorable action on the part of the I. C. C. on the application filed by Chesapeake & Ohio on February 5 for authority to exercise C. & O.'s option, dated February 1, 1932, to purchase 167,000 shares of Nickel Plate and 215,000 shares of Erie common might prove highly beneficial to the present controlling interests of Alleghany-Chesapeake corporations. The option, if exercised, would give C. & O. direct control of Nickel Plate with 57.02 per cent of the stock and of the Erie through ownership of 56.68 per cent stock control. Consolidation of the roads, a move long advocated by the I. C. C., would be beneficial to the weak members of the Van Sweringen system, but it would lessen the value of Chesapeake & Ohio stock. The essence of all the proposed railroad consolidation plans is a tax on a few strong roads for relief money for the needy.

International.

International investment has its drawbacks. International Telephone which has had a bit of hard luck in recent years is plumping down amidst riots and wars. There have been many disturbances in the West Indies. The Spanish affair is still no joke. Now comes the shelling of Shanghai. International's investment in the Shanghai telephone service is not large, and it promises to grow smaller. The largest investment in the Chinese fighting zone is owned by American & Foreign Power, the issues of which were especially weak.

Germany to Float $280,500,000 Loan

Berlin, Aug. 17 (AP).—The government announced a new offering of 700,000,000 marks (about $280,500,000 today in 15-year 4½ per cent treasury bonds for funding operations. The issue conformed with Germany's established policy of such periodic reductions of its internal debt, which now stands at 2,465,000,000 marks (about $990,000,000). Officials said 100,000,000 marks (about $40,200,000) already have been subscribed. The balance will be offered for public subscription at 98.75.

Gay Sees Peril In Too Many Trading Rules

Broad, Liquid Market an Essential Service to the Public, He Says.

Special Dispatch to The Post

New York, Aug. 17.—In his report for the administrative year of the New York Stock Exchange ended May 1 and made public today, Charles R. Gay, president, calls special attention to governmental regulation of securities markets.

Reports, he said, are being filed on more than 25 different forms, some on a daily and others on a weekly, monthly or irregular basis. At the present time reports are being submitted by members and firms at the rate of approximately 150,000 a year, not including the responses of members and firms to requests by Government agencies for data for "special" studies.

"While governmental regulation of securities exchanges is undoubtedly in the experimental stage," he added, "the obligation of those charged with the administration of the securities exchange act is to do so in the true public interest. The true interest of the New York Stock Exchange is identical with the true public interest.

Restrictive Possibilities.

"For this very reason, I cannot refrain from pointing out that too many rules like too many laws, may result in laying unnecessarily restrictive burdens on the many for the sake of disciplining the few. I am fearful that, in an effort to cure what might be termed sporadic evils, undue restraints are being placed upon normal, proper action, thus creating abnormal market conditions.

"Evidence accumulates that the quality of the market has been seriously affected. With much concern I note the continuance of narrow, illiquid markets in which wide spreads between bid and asked quotations prevail and in which comparatively small volumes of buying or selling create undue fluctuations in prices. Almost daily, situations are called to my attention wherein it is impossible to buy or sell reasonable amounts of stock at reasonable prices.

"Orders which, a few years ago, could have been executed within a few minutes or a few hours now often require days and sometimes weeks, with resulting increased risk to the owner. We are told that much business has been diverted to capital centers in other countries where freedom from restriction and other financial conditions prevail. I know that banks and other financial institutions are giving intensive study to conditions prevailing in the security markets.

Profits Tax.

"Factors other than Government regulation, notably the tax on capital gains, have their effect on present market conditions. But I believe that to the extent that excessive regulation stifles individual initiative, intimidates and confuses honest men so that they are unable to determine how to act when swift action is essential, or imposes undue credit restrictions, such regulation is not in the public interest.

"That good has resulted from Government supervision and regulation is granted. However, the time is here when we should assess losses against gains. If the result indicates that a broad and liquid national market is being impaired so that it does not function freely, it follows, of course, that it may cease to function in time of stress. Then, indeed, the public interest is being harmed.

"This is not said in a fault-finding spirit. We of the New York Stock Exchange are in sympathy with the endeavor to promote the public welfare by those who are charged with the administration of the act of 1934. We see, however, grave danger if regulation is carried to the point where the essential public service rendered by a broad, liquid market is destroyed."

Warns On Restrictions

Oils and Utilities Lead Curb Decline

New York, Aug. 17 (AP).—The curb market lacked resistance today as specialties slumped generally lower and oils and utilities wavered. Stocks took the down trail on quickened volume. Leading the descent was Aluminum Co. with a drop of 2 points to 156. Sheehan Williams finished at 133, off 1¾, and Newmont Mining lost a point to close at 111.

In the utility division American Gas & Electric gained ¼ to 34¼ and American Light & Traction advanced a minor fraction to 18¾. American Superpower and Arkansas Natural Gas "A" edged a little lower. Electric Bond & Share ended 19, off ⅜, while United Gas was unchanged at 9⅞. Oils wobbled indecisively with International Petroleum off ⅛ to 35⅛ and Sunray Oil down a minor fraction to 4⅜.

Crude Oil Output Reaches a New Peak

New York, Aug. 17 (AP).—Crude oil production rose to a new record peak in the week ended August 14, the American Petroleum Institute indicated today, marking the fourth consecutive new top.

The flow of crude increased 67,450 barrels daily to 3,718,600, the report showed, compared with 3,707,400 in the like period last year. The output of crude east of California accounted for most of the gain, rising 61,500 barrels daily to 3,042,200 barrels.

Investment Trusts Reacquire Stocks

Outstanding were Adams Express, 941,375, an increase of 7,400 shares over the previous report; Atlas Corporation, 584,110 shares of common, up nearly 10,000, and Transamerica Corporation, 177,481, an increase of 71,481.

Foreign Markets.

By the Associated Press

London, Aug. 17.—Stocks continued to exhibit a weak tone today as selling orders predominated in all sections of the list due to the latest war news from the Far East. Oil issues were in large supply, especially Mexican Eagle shares following rumors that this company was going to close its Mexican refinery. Industrials closed lower, shipping and steel shares leading the decline. Transatlantic securities. European bonds and mining shares finished lower and Far Eastern quotations were nominal.

Paris.—The bourse closed with a mixed tone, with prices generally lower. Rentes lost 10 to 20 centimes and Bank of France shares declined 200 francs. Royal Dutch was also lower while Suez Canal moved up 30 francs.

Liverpool—Cheaper offerings for Russian wheat caused futures to sell off ½d. The market rallied later on the bullish Australian crop estimate and American buying, and closed with net gains of 2⅛ to 2⅜d. Early declines in cotton futures were followed by recoveries on Bombay short covering. The market was hesitant awaiting word from Washington on loan cotton and prices finished 1 point higher to 3 lower.

Humble Oil Declares 62½ Cents on Common

Houston, Tex., Aug. 17 (AP).—Dividends totaling $5,680,150 will be paid October 1 to owners of common stock of the Humble Oil & Refining Co. The board of directors voted to pay 62½ cents on the outstanding 9,000,000 common shares to holders of September 1.

The last dividend on common stock was 37½ cents, about three months ago.

Minor Changes In Adoption Bill Win Approval

Conferees Accept Measure; D. C. Real Estate Plan Also to Be Adopted.

Senate and House conferees yesterday reached an agreement on minor amendments to the District bill modernizing the procedure for adoption.

At the same time Chairman Palmisano of the House District Committee said he would ask the House to accept minor Senate amendments to the bill establishing a real estate commission.

The only other District bill in conference, the Juvenile Court measure, will have to be discussed by the conferees, Palmisano said, because of controversial differences in the Senate and House bills.

They recommended a delay on two labor bills until Congress establishes a national policy on wages and hours. One of the measures sought to regulate the hours of women workers, while the other would have made mandatory one day's rest in seven.

The District heads also disapproved bills to make liability insurance compulsory for all motorists, to exempt from taxation property of the Spanish-American War veterans, and to authorize an appropriation of $5,000 for a police pistol team.

Record Seekers Will Be Limited In D. C. Monument

In the future any athlete who wants to hang up a record in the Washington Monument will have to get official permission, says B. C. Gardner, of the National Park Service.

"I favor keeping the Monument as a memorial and not an athletic stadium," he declared yesterday. "There are rules against running up and down the steps. I think they should be relaxed only for scientific purposes."

What got Gardner started on the subject was a claim made by Paul S. Mitvalsky, from Arizona, that he has broken the up-and-down record. His time was 12 minutes. The present champion, 55-year-old Benjamin K. Morrow, a guard at Lincoln Memorial, does not consider Mitvalsky a serious threat. He implied that Mitvalsky is not a legitimate climber, but a hurdler, or one who climbs 3 and 4 steps at a time. Morrow claims a round trip of 11 minutes and 45 seconds.

New Fidelity Plan To Be Ready Soon

Although official comment was withheld, it was learned yesterday that shareholders of the closed Fidelity Building & Loan Association will soon be presented with a plan for repoening the institution as the First Federal Savings & Loan Association.

Under such a plan, shareholders will be offered a proposal to exchange their shares in the old Fidelity for shares in the new organization. Some cash payment would be available if the new institution reopens the old Fidelity.

Bob Burns Says—

One time a revenue agent made a trip back in the mountains down home where the houses wasn't any closer than 12 miles from each other, and he saw a native walkin' up the road by himself with a square package under his arm. The revenuer hollered at the man, but he looked around and kept on going. When the revenuer started after the native, he began to run and after a 12-mile chase through the woods the revenuer caught him and showed him his badge and says, "I want'ta see what you've got in that bundle."

When the revenuer opened the bundle and saw it was nothin' but a pair of shoes, he turned to the man and says, "Why, you ain't breakin' no law. What was you runnin' for?" and the man says, "Well, I just didn't want to make any new acquaintances!"

Senate Votes Black for Court By Landslide

His confirmation, challenged immediately by an aggressive minority, at no time appeared in doubt. But all day yesterday the Senate reverberated to an attack by opponents.

They raised constitutional questions—whether a Senator was entitled to sit in an office the emoluments of which had been increased in the Supreme Court retirement act—whether a new post had been created by that act—whether a "vacancy" actually existed.

They questioned his "judicial temperament," his legal training and his "poise.' The Klan issue was raised against him by Senator Royal S. Copeland, of New York. Senator Edward R. Burke, of Nebraska, told of two men, now in Washington, he said were present when Black' was inducted into the Klan.

Denounces "Courtesy."

Finally Senator Hiram Johnson, California Progressive Republican, made an impassioned denunciation of "Senatorial courtsy" and appealed for hearings on the Black nomination as "a courtesy we owe to the people beyond these walls."

"Vote us down, if you will," cried Johnson, "but let's not do it under any false pretense."

And the Senate voted them down, brushing aside at one stroke the legal contentions, the questions of personal fitness, the Klan issue and requests for public hearings. Only six Democrats voted with nine Republicans for recommital. The confirmation vote followed immediately, with the line up only slightly changed. Six Democrats joined ten Republicans in final "noes" drowned out by 63 bipartisan "ayes."

It was a challenge by Senator William E. Borah, Idaho Republican, that brought Burke's parting claim of evidence Black had Klan connections, although Copeland had aired reports to that effect.

"There never has been one iota of evidence that Senator Black was a member of the Klan," declared Borah, opposing the motion to reopen hearings. "I am not willing to go about hunting for something."

Copeland asked if it were found the reports were true, would Borah oppose confirmation. The Idahoan said he considered that an entirely different matter—that he would not vote to seat anyone he knew was a member of such an organization.

"But we should not use a mere rumor to humiliate a man," said Borah, "and I have only heard rumors. If anyone has got any facts, let him present them here."

Burke took the floor at once to say that no opportunity was given to lay any evidence before the committee. But he said he had known since Saturday "there are two gentlemen here in Washington" who claim to have been present when Black was inducted into the Klan in Birmingham. He said he wanted them subpenaed before the committee.

Not Brought Before Committee.

Borah asked Burke why he did not tell the committee this, and the Nebraskan replied the Klan question was not discussed in committee, but he had informed members he wanted Black called, and "I had facts I wanted to present."

Senator Millard E. Tydings (Democrat), Maryland, said the very presence of such doubts should influence the committee to hold hearings, "if only in fairness to Senator Black."

"We'll never have a chance to find out the truth after confirmation," said Tydings.

"What harm can there be in holding hearings, if he is not guilty of these imputations?" the Marylander continued. "Why cast over him this veil of suspicion? If for no other reason, Senator Black should be allowed to clear himself of these imputations."

The debate was reaching a tense crescendo when Senator Ashurst adroitly eased over the moment with a colorful recital of the Senate's many fueds with past Presidents and an analogy with the Senate's present differences with the White House.

"We Mock His Grief."

"Truly, we are hard to please," said Ashurst. "If the President laughs, we will not laugh with him. If the President weeps, we mock his grief."

He admonished Senators that "great characters refuse to practice revenge," and added:

"The only sort of toleration that amounts to anything is the toleration that tolerate intolerance."

Senator Carter Glass, Virginia's "unreconstructed rebel," who shouted the loudest "no" vote against Black's confirmation, refused to support the motion to reopen public hearings. He said it "would be a waste of time." Borah likewise opposed reopening of hearings, but voted against confirmation.

The six Democrats who opposed confirmation on the showdown were Burke, Byrd, of Virginia; Copeland; Gerry, of Rhode Island; Glass and King, of Utah. The ten Republicans were Austin, of Vermont; Borah; Bridges, of New Hampshire; Davis, of Pennsylvania; Hale, of Maine; Johnson; Lodge, of Massachusetts; Steiwer, of Oregon; Townsend, of Delaware, and White, of Maine.

It was Senator Bridges, of New Hampshire, who made the futile effort to send Black's name back to committee for hearings.

"Let's not pass the cards under the table, in the dark," he vainly appealed. "If he is above reproach, there should be no fear of public hearings. A man may be a good prosecutor, and not a fair judge, he may be an able Senator and a poor judge. We should give the public a chance to pass on his fitness."

In the thick of the fight for Black's confirmation was Senator Tom Connally, of Texas, who aggressively opposed the President's court bill, but defended his first court nominee. Senator George McGill, of Kansas, and Louis B. Schwellenback, of Washington, also were quick to take the Alabaman's defense, charging Burke's opposition actually was aimed at his liberal legislative record.

Justice Van Devanter, he said, "is off the bench, and nothing can bring him back. Doesn't that create a vacancy?"

Only A "Park Bench."

To those who contended Black's training consisted of a country law practice and a police court judgeship, Connally said neither Justices Sutherland nor McReynolds ever sat on "any bench before but a park bench."

Copeland opened the case for the opposition by directly injecting the Klan issue, and appealing to the President "to withdraw this name and send us another, that of a New Dealer, if you must, but one free from the taint of religious or racial prejudice."

Copeland quoted from numerous newspaper accounts citing Black's alleged klan backing in his first race for the Senate. He said the Senate had an equal responsibility with the President in judicial confirmations.

"Our duty is clear," he said. "This nominee should be rejected if the klan relationship charge is true. If there is a doubt in Senatorial minds about his connection with the klan, the nomination should be recommitted so that the Judiciary Committee may investigate and find the truth."

McGill and Schwellenbach later turned heatedly upon Copeland, who is Tammany candidate for mayor of New York. Schwellenbach by intimation pointed this out, saying Copeland was not talking for the benefit of the Senate, but for New York consumption. McGill refused to yield to Copeland to make what he called "another campaign speech."

Following Copeland in opposition, Burke alluded to the Klan issue, but stressed Constitutional arguments in opposition. He said Congress had created a new position on the court in the Supreme Court retirement act, and also had increased emoluments of court office. That fact alone, he said, rendered a Senator ineligible.

Burke said he believed the Attorney General would have used the constitutional argument against the late Senator Robinson's eligibility, had he been proposed instead of Black. The Attorney General informally has held Black eligible.

The Nebraskan capped his opposition arguments by questioning Black's "judicial temperament, poise and legal training." Not until Burke's challenge late in the afternoon did Burke inform the Senate he could produce witnesses who would say Black was a Klan member.

Legal Grounds Cited.

Austin, who led off the Republican attack on Black's eligibility, and all of his minority colleagues, fought shy of the Klan isssue. Austin based his opposition entirely on the legal grounds first raised by Senator Borah—that Black was debarred because Van Devanter still retains his judicial status, although retired. Austin joined Bridges in insisting that Black's fitness be thoroughly studied, and public hearings held.

Surveys Start On Skyway and DuPont Tunnel

Estimates Due by Nov. 1; High-Speed Road Next; Underpass Opened.

Another year may see Washington well on the road to greater traffic safety with a new and improved system of ultramodern highways.

Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, District highway director, has started a survey for the proposed tunnel beneath DuPont Circle and construction of an elevated "skyway" over K street from Twenty-seventh to Thirty-sixth street northwest.

Preliminary plans and estimates for these projects will be ready by November 1, Capt. Whitehurst said. Work will then be started on an eventual high-speed road—or series of roads—crossing Rock Creek Park.

A new direct connection between southeast and northeast Washington was provided last week, when the District opened an underpass along Montana avenue beneath tracks of the Pennsylvania and B. & O. Railroads.

Constructed at a cost of approximately $90,000 to the District and $150,000 to the railroads, the new underpass will facilitate traffic from Brookland and the southeast and to downtown Washington via New York avenue.

Louis Hofer Dies Of Heart Attack

Borglum Pleased by Reaction To His Black Hills Masterpiece

Americans already are opening their eyes at the big sculptured heads on a mountainside in the Black Hills, but before Gutzon Borglum has finished with them "hearts will be open, too," he declared last night.

The sculptor will be in Washington until Thursday morning making arrangements for unveiling the head of Lincoln on September 17.

"We are having more than 1,000 visitors a day. That's more than they have in the Yellowstone National Park. What pleases me most is that when the people come they are silent and open-eyed. They do not yell and shout," he said.

Borglum said he is well pleased with his Lincoln head but that he likes it no better than he does the Washington and Jefferson heads. "That question was just like asking a mother which of her children she loves the most," he declared.

He has made Lincoln with a characteristic look of sadness on his face and with his hand clutching his coat lapels. "Washington would never have been caught in that position, nor would have Jefferson. I think I have expressed the psychology of the men—Washington, the upright; Jefferson, the alert; Lincoln, who was a kind of saviour.

Jefferson's head was dedicated last August by President Roosevelt. The 70-year-old Borglum, whose long career has been marked by battles and temperament, almost had another tilt on his hands at that time. He wanted to unveil the head in the morning while the sun was at its best, but President Roosevelt insisted on going to church at 11 a. m.

Postlude

The Langley Lambs' Club presents "The Drunkard or The Fallen Saved" at the Sylvan Theater Tuesday night, preceded by a concert by the Washington Gas Light Co. Employes' Band, under the direction of Otto Siebeneichen. Stage performance directed by M. Forney Reese.

Witnessing the type of melodrama that was taken in all seriousness a half century ago, a large audience tried last evening at the Sylvan Theater to recapture a vanished attitude by booing and hissing the villain and cheering the righteous, but it was quite in vain. The spirit of mirth was irrepressible, abetted by the burlesque of old-fashioned acting, and the famous temperance drama once sponsored by Phineas T. Barnum went merrily down the ways of laughter.

Even had the actors played their parts "straight," there still would have been amusement for the present generation in the stilted sentiments and the rhetorical platitudes that once passed for realities in the theater. So it was just as well that the Langley Lambs' Club made light of the whole affair, even to a jumbling of period costumes that would have made a Hollywood director tear his hair.

Larry Lawrence in the role of Edward Middleton was the only one who essayed versimilitude in his acting and kept the exaggerations of burlesque at a minimum. Without that core of emotional solidity, the drama of degradation redeemed and villainy unmasked would have fallen asunder. While he carried the necessary burden of realistic characterization, the remainder of the cast had a joyous time in the comedy of make-believe.
